QUEEN EMMA'S DEATH.

The death of the Dowager Queen Emma, widow of Kamehameha the Fourth, cast a gloom over the entire community, by whom she was greatly beloved and respected.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION.

Attention is directed to an advertisement "by authority," announcing that Messrs. W. G. Irwin & Co. have been appointed special agents for the Bureau of Japanese Immigration.

In thus undertaking this most important duty, Messrs. W. G. Irwin & Co. are simply acting for the Immigration Department while supplying necessary funds, being rigidly regulated in all things by the rules and regulations of the Immigration Department.

Messrs. W. G. Irwin & Co. have made arrangements for 600 immigrants from Japan, to arrive here some time in May by the City of Tokio. These are principally from the agricultural districts of Japan and will be found to be a valuable accession to our labor population.

The community at large have reason to be satisfied with this arrangement, which guarantees a continuance of the immigration policy by which the country has already profited so much. It is fair to all parties. But Messrs. W. G. Irwin & Co. certainly deserve commendation for their public spirit in advancing credits and conducting this important business for the general good, the utmost they require being a guarantee against actual loss.

DEPARTED.

Death of Dowager Queen Emma.

She Died Suddenly at Her City Residence.

Saturday Afternoon, Shortly Before 2 O'clock.

The following was published as a second edition of the P. C. ADVERTISER on Saturday evening, the 25th instant:

The announcement of the death of the Dowager Queen Emma, this afternoon, created great excitement in Honolulu, as well on account of her high rank and influence, as because of her exalted character and virtues. The deceased lady was born January 2, 1836, and was therefore in her fiftieth year at her death.

Queen Emma was distinguished by her devotion to the Anglican Church, and it was through her personal influence that a branch of it—the diocese of Honolulu—was established here. Immediately after her marriage she conceived the idea of founding what is now the Queen's Hospital, and her husband, King Kamehameha the Fourth, journeyed all over the islands, asking subscriptions for its erection.

Queen Emma was likewise greatly interested in the foundation and maintenance of Iolani College, named after her husband, who was known among his own people as Iolani, that being his personal name. Queen Emma has regularly paid for the education of several pupils at Iolani College, and others of her race have been educated elsewhere at her expense.

Queen Emma visited England after her royal husband's death. She was accompanied by the late Rev. William Hoopikaunui, a deacon of the English Church, who preached a sermon in English in Westminster Abbey. The reverend gentleman was also accompanied by his wife, and while in England the party were the recipients of much attention, the Dowager Queen being received very warmly by Queen Victoria and many of the nobility, as well as by Exeter Hall, the great center of evangelical effort in England.

"During the short time that Queen Emma remained in England, meetings, at which Her Majesty Queen Victoria was present, were held in several parts of the country in favor of the Episcopal and English Mission recently sent out to Honolulu. It is well that Her Majesty and suite were able to attend these meetings. They have afforded to all who have thus shared the privilege of personal intercourse with the illustrious visitor to our country, the most satisfactory evidence that could be desired of the influence under which her character has been formed, and the judgment and intelligence with which her education has been directed."

Queen Emma enjoyed uniformly good health for many years, but a stroke of paralysis, a considerable time ago, was the premonitory symptom of the fatal attack under which she succumbed to-day. A second attack at Kohala, during her recent visit to Hawaii, excited considerable apprehension in the mind of Dr. Robert McKibbin, who was her private physician for many years. This anxiety increased by reason of the personal habits of the Dowager Queen, who had become very corpulent and abstained from taking exercise. She likewise gratified her appetite for food, which was large, against the advice of her physician.

The last scene. Dr. McKibbin was interviewed by an ADVERTISER reporter shortly after the announcement of Queen Emma's death, when he made the following statement:

"The Dowager Queen Emma had been perfectly well lately. Yesterday evening she complained of headache, and Miss Peabody asked me to call and see her. I called last night, and found that she had a slight headache and had taken a little medicine. There were no alarming symptoms, and I apprehended nothing except the natural anxiety with which, as her physician, I watched her recurring headaches.

"I called on her again this morning, and found her lying on a sofa. She complained of her head, but said it was not a very bad headache. She was very hungry and wanted her breakfast. I would not permit her to eat anything, however, except a little tea and toast. On leaving the Queen's residence, I met Mr. Cartwright, her financial agent and personal friend, and I told him that I was anxious about the headaches to which she was subject.

"I then went to the hospital and returned to my own house about ten minutes after 1 o'clock. As I entered I was called by telephone. I recognized Miss Peabody's voice, asking me to come very quick as the Queen had another attack.

"I went immediately to the house, and as soon as I saw her, I directed Dr. Trousseau and Mr. Cartwright to be telephoned for, as from her appearance I knew that she was very ill. Her breathing was stertorous, and she had hardly any pulse. "Dr. Trousseau soon came in, and we administered medicine. She recovered somewhat and her pulse became stronger; so much so that the doctors were about to leave. She arose, and when passing from one room to another, she was seized with another attack of convulsions, and died at ten minutes before two o'clock, the attack from the beginning lasting barely an hour. Her death was caused by effusion of blood into the base of the brain."

It may be added that at the moment of Queen Emma's death she was reclining on a sofa, attended by her faithful companion and friend, Miss Peabody.

DISPOSITION OF THE BODY. Immediately upon the receipt of the sad intelligence, Hon. H. A. Widemann and Mr. W. C. Parke went to the residence of the late Queen Emma. Mr. Cartwright requested Mr. Parke to take charge of the preparations for the funeral. Mr. C. E. Williams received orders to prepare an inner coffin to be encased in lead, and this is to be placed in an outer sarcophagus of koa and kou woods, with proper emblems of the late Queen's rank. The coffins cannot possibly be ready in less than two weeks, and the remains of the late royal lady will lie in state in the usual manner of the bodies of Aliis.

A guard of police has been placed at the entrance to the grounds of the late Queen's residence, and a large number of natives have assembled. They are very quiet, the news of the death of their "good and gracious Queen, mother, and friend," as they delighted to call her, having taken all by surprise. The flags throughout the city and on the Government buildings and shipping were displayed at half-mast when the news became known. Places of business were closed, and a general air of quiet and sorrow was noticeable on the faces of all.

The usual Saturday afternoon concert was postponed, and all felt that the death of this amiable lady was a public as well as a private loss. The nearest relative of the deceased Queen is Albert K. Kumiaka. His mother was a sister of Queen Emma's mother, and his father was a high chief.

FURTHER PARTICULARS. Lying in State—Great Demonstrations of Grief.

In the evening, before the remains were removed to the room where they were to lie in state, the Rev. Alexander Mackintosh read the service for the dead according to the ritual of the English Church. The body was then prepared for the ceremonies of the following day.

At the late Queen Dowager's residence at 4 p. m. on Saturday, and again late at night, accompanied by Colonel the Hon. C. P. Iaukea, the Queen and other members of the royal family also visited the house of mourning in the afternoon of Saturday. The Royal Guards were placed on duty about the house at sunset, and remained during the night. A large number of natives collected, and their wailing was deep and heartfelt. A group of the late Queen Dowager's retainers sang at intervals songs composed for the occasion, which were very sweet and mournful. Early yesterday (Sunday) morning posters were put up notifying the public that the body would lie in state from 9 a. m. to 1 o'clock p. m., and the Minister of Foreign Affairs officially notified the Diplomatic and Consular Corps of the fact of the royal lady's decease and of the sad ceremony of the day.

At an early hour a very large number of people were gathered at the gates of the late Queen's residence, and at the appointed time all were admitted to view the face of her who was so lately taken from them.

The body was laid on a bier placed in the drawing-room of the residence. The bier was covered with heavy black cloth, and the remains were clothed in white silk. Over the body was laid a coverlet of heavy silk, richly embroidered in gold. Upon the head of the deceased Queen was placed a circlet of jewels, and on the arms were gold and jeweled bracelets. The features of the dead wore a peaceful expression, and bore but faint traces of death.

Near the body were stationed a number of old female retainers of her late Majesty, who kept waving small kahilis or feather plumes over the remains. Beyond these were male retainers, dressed in black, and holding large kahilis, symbols of rank. The soldiers detailed to do guard duty during the day were the Royal troops, and the Guard of Honor about the bier was composed of the following gentlemen: Colonel the Hon. C. H. Judd, H. M. Chamberlain; Colonel E. W. Purvis, H. M. Vice-Chamberlain; Colonel the Hon. C. P. Iaukea, Colonel James H. Boyd and Colonel the Hon. G. W. Macfarlane of His Majesty's Staff, also Major Antonio Rosa of the Governor of Oahu's Staff.

Their Majesties the King and Queen and members of the royal family were present during the day. His Majesty's Ministers, the members of the Diplomatic and Consular Corps, all our leading citizens, besides some 2,000 of all classes, conditions and nationalities of men, women and children passed by the bier or collected around the house and grounds to do honor to the deceased.

MILITARY GUARDS. By direction of the Governor of Oahu, the detail of the guard placed about the premises is as follows: During the day the royal (Household) troops will be on duty. At night the following volunteer organizations take charge of the premises: The King's Own, the Honolulu Rifles, the Mamalahou Guards, Princes' Own Guards and the Leleiohoku Guards. The first named went on duty last Saturday night, the Honolulu Rifles took charge last night, and the Mamalahou Guards go on to-night. The Prince's Own are for duty to-morrow night, and the Leleiohoku Guards take charge Thursday evening. Then the King's Own will come on again, and in their regular order, as above, the other military organizations.

The wailing of the Hawaiians about the premises is loud and long-continued. They all feel their loss deeply, and from the other islands may be expected many during the next two weeks, who will hasten to Honolulu to weep over their dead.

OUR SUPPLEMENT.

We publish a page supplement to-day to furnish our readers with full details of the very important local events of the past two days, in addition to other points of special and general interest.

The sad news of the death of Dowager Queen Emma naturally takes first place in our columns. To gratify the general craving for details regarding this event we published and circulated gratis a large "extra" on Saturday evening. This we reprint to-day, with further particulars.

The history of Odd Fellowship in Honolulu, which chiefly fills our supplement, will be read with interest by all members of the order of Odd Fellows, as well as by members of benevolent societies generally. Our report of Saturday's picnic and entertainment is very complete; but in reproducing the ADVERTISER'S report of the interesting and important proceedings at the laying of the corner stone of the Odd Fellow's Hall in 1853, we have performed a feat in journalism never before attempted in Honolulu. The roll of membership since 1846, which we also publish, is of the utmost value. It will be necessary to send in orders early for extra copies to prevent disappointment.

Mr. Rutledge, manager of the San Francisco Dramatic Company, made prompt announcement of the fact that he would postpone the presentation of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" from Saturday till Tuesday evening, out of respect for the memory of the late Queen Dowager. We bespeak for this company a full house to-morrow evening. They deserve it. The members of the I. O. O. F. have a rare treat in store for them to-morrow evening, being nothing less than a lecture by Brother W. C. Parke, P. D. D. G. S., on the institution of the Hawaiian Islands from the institution of Excelsior Lodge, in 1846, to the laying of the corner stone of their present hall in 1859. All members of the order are invited to attend. Advertise in the WEEKLY P. C. ADVERTISER if you wish to sell your wares to advantage. It is more generally read than any other weekly paper published in the Kingdom.
