Where Progress is Slow.
(Chicago Herald.)
"Smith, did you see my wife go down this street?"
"Yes, she passed about an hour ago."
"Wonder what my chances are for overtaking her?"
"Good. The sidewalk is just lined with show windows."

The Seals Would Not Cheat.
(Life.)

Ragman - Madame, about twenty-four pounds.
Bridget - Ye old scoundrel, it weighs over forty, for I weighed it myself.
Ragman - B-leave me, Madame, I wouldn't cheat a child; but my scales will only vary twenty-four pounds.

Lincoln Didn't want Jeff Davis.
(Ex-Secretary T. F. Fisher.)
It was apparent to all who bore intimate relations with Mr. Lincoln, that foreseeing the termination of the war by the submission of the insurgents, his mind was seriously affected in contemplation of the new responsibilities which would devolve upon him. His speech grew more grave, and his aspect more serious. A short time before the capitulation of Gen. Lee, Gen. Grant had told him that the war must necessarily soon come to an end, and wanted to know of him whether he should try to capture Jeff Davis, or let him escape from the country if he would. He said: "About that, I told him the story of an Irishman who had taken the pledge of Father Mathew. He became terribly thirsty and applied to a bartender for a tot, and while it was being prepared he whispered to him, 'and couldn't ye put a little brandy in it unbeknown to meself?' I told Grant if he could let Jeff Davis escape all unbeknown to himself, to let him go. I didn't want him."

Senator Everts Missed.
(Boston Globe.)
The story is told of Senator W. M. Everts, of New York, that he once sent a dog up to his farm at Windsor, Vt., and about a week afterward received the following letter from his little grandchild:
"DEAR GRANDPA, The little monkey is very gentle, but he makes a big noise night. He is very lonesome. I guess he misses you. I hope you will come up soon, and then he won't be lonesome."
MRS. E.

Moral: Always Look at Both Ends.
(Bridgewater Independent.)

This is an apple, large and round,
At the top of the barrel always found.

This the apple small and mean,
Always at the bottom seen.

Letting the Evening Star Go By.
(Harper's Monthly.)

A railroad engineer, recounting his experiences, said that he had thus far escaped smashups, but that he once had offered to "run for it" one night. Said he: "It was a clear autumn evening, and I was running a passenger train in Virginia. We were a little behind time, and I was looking toward the machine along at a good pace. There was a strip of cypress forest to go through, and the road, on clearing it, took a sharp turn to the right. Just as we made that turn my liver came right up between my teeth, for there, coming straight down the track, was another engine, with her headlight flaming in my eyes. I blew 'down brakes' and had my engine reversed before I'd drawn half a breath, and sent the train back on a dead run to a switch station about a mile behind us. I got it on a siding, and waited for the other train that I supposed to be just on top of us, but she didn't show up. I got the agent to wire up the line to see if there were any specials or wild engines in the way, but the answer was that the line was clear. The passengers got out, and began to talk and ask questions, and as for me, I was stumped. I thought of runaway locomotives and train-wreckers and tramps. Everything was quiet around the bend, so far as I could see and hear. While standing on the station platform I happened to glance westward across a clearing; there was the headlight shining through the cypress, as serene and steady as you please. It was the planet Venus. Well, if any man had offered fifteen cents for me, he could have had me just as I stood. I got away from there in a hurry, and I didn't allow the passengers to discover what was the matter. Let it be if it had got around that I had laid over to let the evening star go by, I'd never have heard the last of it."

Nervous old lady boards a train; when about to seat herself, discovers a horrid man with a gun in the car. "I hope that thing is not loaded."

Frisco Sportsman—"Yes, ma'am; it is. However, I will insert this cork in the muzzle. There! Quite safe now."
The timid one is satisfied.
