AFFAIRS IN CHILE.

The accounts received of the condition of affairs in the Republic of Chile are most conflicting and contradictory, the friends of each party endeavoring to make it appear that their own side is on the point of gaining the day.

In all this confusion of reports, it is however noticeable that dispatches dated from Valparaiso generally seem to lean towards the Government or President Balmaceda's side, while those from Buenos Ayres appear to favor the popular or so-called insurgent side.

The revolted ships have been expelled from Chilean ports. The people and army support the Government which has taken severe measures against the insurgents. All the country condemns the revolted ships and asks that the authors of the revolt be punished.

A conference has been held between President Balmaceda and the fifteen deputies when it was hoped that the President would tender his resignation; he did not do so, however, and the conference had no result.

We should be inclined to credit the Buenos Ayres telegrams rather than those from Valparaiso, the former being more independent than the latter, which is at present in the hands of the Balmaceda party. Evidently the bulk of the Chilean navy is on the popular side, and Chile is exceptionally vulnerable from the sea, as all its produce, corn, coal, copper, other minerals, nitrates, etc., are produced near the coast, and all export as well as import trade is carried on by sea.

From Rome comes news that prominent Italian adherents of the pope see are much dissatisfied with the recent wholesale dismissal by the pope of Italian servants at the Vatican, and that his holiness has received a hint that it would be for his interest to dismiss the foreigners who have been engaged in the places of the dismissed Italians.

AIMS OF KALAKAUA.

He Was to Have Gone to Washington.

INTENDED INVESTMENT IN SAN DIEGO.

Fine Traits in His Character—He Was a Sincere Christian.

Colonel George W. Macfarlane, the late King Kalakaua's chamberlain, who was stricken with a severe attack of pleurisy caused by a cold caught during his visit to Southern California with the King, had so far recovered yesterday as to be able to leave his bed and walk about the garden surrounding the house on Howard street where he is staying.

Now, I will tell something about His Majesty," said the Colonel, "that the world does not know. In the first place his whole heart and soul was in having the provisions of the reciprocity treaty between the islands and the United States preserved intact and taken out of the operation of the McKinley bill. This was the true reason of his visit to this country.

He had purposely delayed his departure on the Charleston in order to be able to hear from his Minister at the capital. This he had confided to me as a secret, and had not his sickness overcome him he would, regardless of his weakened constitution have made the trip.

He had a fear of the effects of the cold and terrible winters in the East, but had made up his mind to brave the consequences rather than return to Honolulu without having accomplished his purpose. He instructed me to telegraph to Mr. Carter to see the Secretary of State and ask his influence to have the President call the attention of Congress to the matter before the 4th of next March.

On being questioned in reference to the rumor that the Kahunas, or praying men of his people, were "praying him to death," and that the "knowledge of that fact had such a depressing effect upon him that he had given up the fight against death and yielded to his fate, the chamberlain, on declaring the whole story an untruth, stated:

"In the first place the King by his education and association with the outer world was entirely above such superstitions. He would listen to the old Alii's, and then smile when they had left. To show how utterly groundless the story is, I will state that for some days before his death I did not allow His Majesty to see or read any of his letters from Honolulu. He, in fact, received no information whatever of the doings there, and could not possibly have known anything about such an absurdity, had it really happened. He knew nothing whatever about the appearance of a school of the alulaa or redfish in the harbor of Honolulu after his departure, which is generally accepted by the Kanakas as the forerunner of the death of a member of the royal family.

On the contrary, he would not admit that he was sick to a degree greater than indisposition caused by the change in the climate. He was always cheerful, and when I urged upon him the necessity of absolute rest and the cancellation of all his engagements he smiled and said to his friends, "George thinks I am sicker than I am."

"During his visit to San Diego he became very much infatuated with that country, and announced his intention of investing in land in that place, and a few days before his last illness instructed me to notify the Hawaiian Consul there that he would make arrangements on his return on the Charleston (he expected to come back on the cruiser) to secure some desirable lands there.

On the question of the late King's religious belief, the Colonel stated that he was a thorough Christian and had no sympathy whatever with the heathenish beliefs that had been charged against him, that he did not lead a dual life, but, on the contrary, was a Christian and intelligent gentleman.

He was a member and a regular attendant of the Episcopal Cathedral of St. Andrew in Honolulu and a communicant in that faith. True, he was a member of the Kilokilo Society of Honolulu, a society of natives that is somewhat akin to the Masons and carried on for the purpose of the perpetuation of the traditions and history of the people, but he simply had become a member for policy's sake, for fear that a refusal would offend his people.

He never forgot the duties of his church, and during his stay in this city attended Trinity regularly, and attended communion service on the first Sunday after his arrival here.

Shortly before the King's departure from Honolulu he made his will, which was intrusted to Colonel Macfarlane and by him locked in a safe at the chamberlain's office. What it contains will not be known in Honolulu until the Colonel's arrival there. The King, according to the chamberlain, has left a considerable estate, his income being over $100,000 a year, made up of his salary from the Government and $60,000 derived from the income of the crown lands.

There will be a special session of the Legislature called," continued the Colonel, "as soon as the death of the King is known; but that will be simply for the purpose of making a formal announcement of His Majesty's demise and the making of the necessary appropriations for the new Government. Of course, the Ministry will resign, but that will simply be in accordance with custom. They will be retained in office unless the new Queen desires the services of others. The Queen is an exceedingly intelligent woman—in fact, far above any of her line, and will make a good sovereign.

The report that she would nominate a successor has no foundation. She cannot, for two reasons. First, her niece was nominated by the late King, and she can do nothing but ratify her nomination as heiress apparent; and, secondly, Kaulani is next in the direct line of succession.

Kalakaua's Last Words Preserved by Phonograph.

Outside the little circle of immediate friends and attendants upon the late King Kalakaua who were admitted into the sick chamber it is not known that for the ten days prior to the monarch's death an Edison phonograph stood near the bedside. Many who saw the instrument daily never suspected its character or use, and during the excitable days preceding the King's death, during which every nerve was taxed to its greatest tension, the innocent-looking little machine reposed in its shaded corner unnoticed and unobserved by all except by the King's chamberlain and his secretary.

When the phonograph was brought into the sickroom last Monday a week ago Chamberlain Macfarlane explained its use and purpose to the King and begged that he would speak into the receiver. The near approach of death was not suspected at that time, but it was urged upon Kalakaua that in after years his people would be rejoiced to listen to the natural tones of their former ruler. Little did either the King or the chamberlain suspect that in less than a week the little waxen scroll containing the words of King Kalakaua in audible characters would be so highly prized.

The King consented, and, raising himself up in bed, put the receiver in his mouth and talked into the instrument in his native tongue. He spoke slowly and with some effort for nearly ten minutes, then sank back exhausted, promising to complete the message when he should feel stronger. Then next day came, with the excitement incidental to preparing for the supper in honor of the King at the California Hotel, and the phonograph was forgotten. On the following day came the entertainments for the Mystic Shrine, and again the phonograph was neglected.

After that until death had closed his lips forever both Secretary Baker and Chamberlain Macfarlane watched and waited anxiously for the signs of returning consciousness, when they might have the King conclude the scroll, but the watching and waiting were fruitless.

On Wednesday the phonograph operator was sent for. He removed the waxen roll and gave it to Colonel Baker, who has since guarded it as sacredly as his own life. Yesterday he took it back to Honolulu, where its worth will be computed beyond measure in vulgar coin. It has not been read yet, nor will it be read until it is placed in an instrument upon Hawaiian soil. It will probably play a most important part in the Hawaiian obsequies.—S. F. Chronicle.

Prices are below San Francisco rates, and perfect satisfaction guaranteed.

WHY IS IT?

That an engineer, running perhaps only a donkey engine, will constantly have his oil can in reach, and apply it to all parts of his engine freely; and a man owning a watch that costs him a great deal of money will let it run for years without a particle of oil. Why is it?

On the one hand a heavy, clumsy piece of machinery; on the other, a delicate piece of machinery, a great many times more valuable; and yet less attention paid the latter than the first.

Remember that even the comparatively simple process of cleaning a watch should be done by a skilled workman, or more harm than good may result therefrom.

The annoyance of finding it necessary to send your watch abroad for repairs has entirely been done away with. Your time-piece, no matter how valuable, nor in what condition it may be, can be repaired at home, and in such a manner that it will be a pleasure to you.

My watch repairing department is now so perfect and in a position to do the most intricate work to your entire satisfaction, and at no greater expense than the same would be charged for in the United States. If your time-piece is beyond repair, you will be told so, and put to no expense in having it overlooked.
