HIS BOTTLE CAME HIGH

Crimp McCarthy Fined
Fifty Dollars.

HE ASSAULTED A SAILOR

Was Accustomed to Give His Boarders a Lemon for Their Breakfast.

The Police Court calendar was the longest yesterday in a couple of weeks, and now that election lenty is a thing of the past there is every prospect of business at the old stand booming as of yore.

Twenty-seven cases made up the program and of these one-half were charges of drunkenness.

Herring, an anti-prohibitionist, escaped the meshes of the law by forfeiting his ball.

Keao, a wahine charged with absorbing too much Kakaako "dew," made goo-goo eyes at the Judge without avail and was mulcted two dollars and costs.

Funada, a little brown man whose face wore the expression of an amused baboon, left his horse untied and subscribed six dollars in consequence.

Go Yee offended in a similar respect and his purse was relieved for the same amount.

Cases against James Antone and Solomon Keawe of beating one Sol Tim without authority, justification or extenuation by law, were continued until today.

Haskell, who played a game in which something of value was lost or won, to wit, 7-11, will explain in court tomorrow morning.

Cummings and Duschalsky, who biffed each other in a public place, said that they were both pretty full at the time and did not remember what occurred.

"That won't go here," said the Judge, as he fined them $5 and costs apiece. "You can't get drunk and then go and break another law. Why, you might as well go and kill a man and then come and tell me you were drunk."

Ah Kong, a possessor of opium or a preparation thereof, was assessed $50 and costs.

McCarthy, the tall crimp with the "gimlet optics" was in trouble for assaulting and battering a sailor named Hanlon, by feloniously striking him on the head with a certain weapon injurious to life and the pursuit of happiness, to wit, a bottle.

Hanlon's eye was surrounded with a purple halo and he told a tale of extremely rough usage. He testified that he was boarding with defendant and asked him for his breakfast, whereupon McCarthy aspersed his parentage, hit him on the head with a bottle, knocked him down and kicked him in the breast. Hanlon said, "He gives his boarders a nickel to get breakfast with every five or six days. One day he gave me and two other men who were working on a ship a bottle of gin for breakfast, and another time he gave me a lemon."

"Is it not a fact that you are an expungist?" asked Attorney Henshall.

"No, sir," replied the witness. "I am an old man. One day McCarthy wanted me and another man to fight in his yard to amuse him, but I refused, for I am a quiet man, so I am."

"Did you call McCarthy any pet names when you asked him for breakfast?" enquired Judge Wilcox.

"I axed him polite like," was the answer.

"I suppose you said, 'My dear Mr. McCarthy, I am badly in need of bodily sustenance and if you would kindly furnish it I shall feel truly obliged,'" remarked His Honor.

"I axed him very nice," replied Hanlon, "though I didn't use them same words."

Witness J. McIntyre, who explained that he didn't love one man in the case more than another, testified that when Hanlon asked for something to eat McCarthy fed him with a bottle.

"Was Hanlon drunk at the time?" asked Attorney Henshall.

"No," replied McIntyre. "He wasn't drunk; he was just sitting quiet like on the veranda with a bottle of swipes. He'd take a drink and then he'd sing a verse to the bottle and then he'd take another drink, and he was very peculiar that way."

E. L. Gillette, the male chambermaid at the boarding-house, said that he heard Hanlon challenge McCarthy to fight and saw the two scrapping. He knew nothing of the bottle racket.

McCarthy swore that Hanlon came up to him and asked him for two bits and then squared off and struck him in the chest. He admitted having a bottle in his hand but denied that anything but his first had struck Hanlon.

"It didn't amount to nothing," said McCarthy. "He came back and wanted to fight, so I licked him and then we shook hands and made up. He was always drunk about the house and smashed the furniture. I told him before I hit him to go away as I didn't want to have no trouble, but he wouldn't listen. I used to give all my boarders two bits for to get breakfast with, but they blowed it in for swipes, so I had to knock off and take them to a restaurant instead."

Attorney Henshall moved for a dismissal on the grounds of insufficient evidence. Judge Wilcox found defendant guilty and fined him $50 and costs, saying in conclusion:

"You are running a sailors' boarding-house, McCarthy, and you must expect trouble at times. You must take the law into your own hands, however. If you were a smaller man you would not be eager to accept invitations to fight or to show others the error of their way."

An appeal was noted.

McCarthy winced when he heard the amount, but remembering that Turk and Lewis were no longer here to gibe over his misfortune, his classic features became a parade ground for a large smile.

HOW TO TREAT A TROUBLESOME CORN.
To remove a troublesome corn or bunion: First soak the corn or bunion in warm water to soften it, then pare it down as closely as possible without drawing blood and apply Chamberlain's Pain Balm twice daily, rubbing vigorously for five minutes at each application. A corn plaster should be worn for a few days, to protect it from the shoe. As a general liniment for sprains, bruises, lameness and rheumatism, Pain Balm is unequalled. For sale by Benson, Smith & Co., Ltd., wholesale agents.
