AN EXAMINER FAKE.

Another Yarn About Slavery on the Plantations. Of all the freaky, fake stories which the San Francisco Examiner conjures up against the welfare and good name of the Islands, the following clipped from the issue of April 4, takes the prize:

A colored lad, aged thirteen, whose name is Charlie Lewis, tells a wonderful tale of kidnapping and slavery. By his own statement, he and two companions of the same color and age were lured aboard a train at Montecito, Aia, locked in a compartment and taken to New Orleans, thence to San Francisco, and then shipped to the Hawaiian Islands on the steamer China to serve as slaves on a sugar plantation near Kahului, on the island of Maui.

Charlie Lewis' companions were put in prison for refusing to work, preferring the prison to twelve hours' daily labor, with merely board for wages, and three years of the same ahead of them. Charlie stole out in a small boat to the steamer Centennial, in which he stowed away and arrived in San Francisco Thursday last under the care of Martin Meade, a machinist and water-tender of the Centennial, living at 2417 Eagle avenue, Alameda.

After telling how he and the other lads were taken to Honolulu and the sugar camp, Charlie said: "We were paid only in food, and if we did not work we were put in jail. Joe Manuel and George Brooks were in jail when I stole away. They said they were better off in jail, where they got their meals, than working all day for nothing. I was not often beaten. I worked most of the time, or made them think I did."
