SHRINERS TELL OF THE MANY QUEER SIGHTS IN HAWAII

Detroit's returned pilgrims from Hawaii tell some interesting stories of life over there. Said W. H. McGregor, who acted as correspondent for the Tribune and News-Tribune:

"Our party was composed in the main, of men along in life, of independent fortunes, and while there were a few younger business men on board, who made a little fun, in the main we composed a dignified body.

"One who has not seen the islands can form no adequate idea of their loveliness at this season, when every semi-tropical plant is bursting into bloom, and the coconut trees drop a ripe nut every day of the year. Is it any wonder that the natives do not care to work for a living? Nature does all the work. It is possible to live there on a sum that seems ridiculous to a white man, but the natives enjoy life. While civilization has its delights, I doubt if, for all our improvements, we are really any happier than the people of the islands, who live on little and take no heed of the morrow. Life with them seems one long holiday, and a cloud never appears on the horizon.

"It's an expensive place for tourists, however, and $10 a day is an exceedingly modest estimate. Hack hire costs several dollars a day alone, and this, with other necessary things, eats up money fast. An American could not rent a house there fit to live in for much less than $50 a month, and even then he'd feel he was cheated. The hotels charge big prices.

"The Pacific ocean is usually called peaceful, but old travelers in our party who had crossed the Atlantic many times without succumbing to seasickness, found themselves prostrated by the Pacific. One man kept in his state-room nearly all the time, declaring that if he went on deck he'd throw himself into the sea. He didn't care to live, he said, and others were similarly afflicted.

"We tried all sorts of cures, but the best thing we struck was ginger ale, good and plenty.

"One of the queer results is that it seems to upset all your past habits. One of our party, who was such an inveterate tobacco-chewer, even using the weed before breakfast, found that after he had been seasick all desire for tobacco was gone, and he declared he'd break off forever. Another man ravenously ate onions, although for years before the very smell of Bermudas made him sick. Seasickness, in his case, has turned him into a confirmed lover of onions. How long it will last there is no telling, but the way he devoured them after recovery seemed to indicate a lively future.

"They do not talk much about the leper colony there, although we passed in full view of the lepers' island. It is looked upon as an unfortunate thing and is kept as quiet as possible. To my mind, it is a blood disease, and appears after several generations among the descendants. There has recently been introduced a new system of quarantine and reporting, which may possibly aid in stamping out the dreadful affliction.

"There is not much chance for white man's labor on the islands, certainly not for merchants. Japs, Chinese and Portuguese do all that for a price so low that our American laboring man could not make his salt. The only chance is for people with money, as even the clerkships are monopolized by the sons of the rich American or English proprietors of the sugar plantations.

QUEEN'S BOUNTY FOR TRIPLETS.

"I had once," writes a correspondent, "the curiosity to write to Windsor castle and ask for the origin of the Queen's charitable practice of giving a bounty to women who had given birth to triplets. I had a very curious reply from the Queen's private secretary explaining that the first gift to a woman who had three children at a birth was prompted solely by Her Majesty's sympathetic feeling toward her. The case had happened to come to the knowledge of the Queen, and she sent a sovereign for each of the newly arrived little Britons, as an assistance to the mother in her embarrassment of family treasures. This had happened about forty years before the correspondence and quite early in the reign, and had cost the Queen's private purse about $1,500 a year ever since. Of course, it is not in all cases of the kind that this 'bounty' is sent to the mother. It is only to those who are poor and apply for it, but as the majority of people are poor, and somehow these little surprises seem generally to overtake people who cannot afford them, the Queen's bounty for triplets had come to be regarded almost as a matter of course."

GAVE HIM BACK THE SAME KIND.

A story is told of an amusing encounter which Maurice Barrymore once had with a stranger. "Will you oblige me with a light?" said Barrymore to a bearded stroller. "Certainly," said the stranger, holding over his cigar. But when Barrymore handed back the perfect owner flung it away. Out came Barrymore's cigar case. "Take one of mine," he said, with a tone to the invitation which made an order of it. The stranger hesitated and took the cigar. "Let me offer you a light," added Barrymore, giving his lighted weed to the other. Upon regaining his cigar Barrymore, of course, flung it away. "I should like to continue this indefinitely, but I have only a few cigars," he said, and walked off. Barrymore would devote as much thought to a trifle like this as he would require to write a brilliant essay or memorize a part.

QUEER PLACE FOR SETTLE'S MONEY.

Edward Settle of Hicksville, L. I. is seeking legal advice upon a perplexing problem. A few days ago Settle sold an old cow to a Brooklyn butcher for $46. He considered that he had obtained a good price and was happy. On Monday Settle received a postal card with some interesting news. The butcher had found a wallet in the stomach of the cow. The wallet contained several gold coins and $72 in bills. Settle thinks he has some claim upon the money, and will demand that the butcher turn over part of it to him. If not, he declares he will sue.

SOLD FOR $40,000 AN ACRE.

What is said to be the largest tract of land on Manhattan Island was sold a few days ago for $1,000,000. It contains twenty-five acres and is known as the Powers estate at Fort George. The building boom has made it gilt-edge residence property.

"Chinamen do all the manual labor for a song, but they differ from any Chinese I ever saw. They spend money liberally for food and fine living, according to their notions.

"One of the common sights is to see a Chinese laundryman take an automobile down to the fish market. There is a fine public service of automobiles there, and the rate is $1 an hour, and a Chinese thinks nothing of paying this price to go down to buy a 25-cent fish.

"Chinese like a native dish called 'poi,' which is one of the consistency of boiled starch. He takes it on his fingers and manages to gulp it down.

"The natives are fond of a peculiar onion that grows in the ocean, but to get it they have to wade out till waist-deep, and then swim under water, grabbing a handful of seaweeds, which they pick over and find the little berry, which they eagerly devour. Sometimes they stay in the water half a day.

"One of the prettiest customs on the islands consists of loading departing guests with flowers. Great wreaths and strings of posies are placed around the necks of passengers by friends, and even wound around their hats and thrust into their hands. Just before the steamer sails, it is the custom to throw the flowers back on the wharf, amidst cheers and general rejoicing. Our party was simply deluged with tributes, and we pelted each other with the posies as the ship slowly left the landing. It formed a remembrance of the islands, such as will always linger."

"To meet the Queen is an interesting sight," said Fred E. Morley of the Griswold House. "I can't tell you what she had on, but she was beautifully dressed in what looked to me like a Paris gown. I came in one day and my wife said: 'You must meet the Queen!' I asked time to sleep up a bit, for I'm not meeting Queens every day, but she said: 'Oh, there is no formality about it; just come on at once.' I'll admit I was nervous, but I was soon ushered into a room at the hotel and saw before me a tall, dark lady, who, as I advanced, smiled sweetly and extended her hand. She said: 'How do you do,' in excellent English, and nodded her head. I replied that I was feeling well, and that I hoped to find her the same. She asked me if I enjoyed myself, and I said, 'Yes, your majesty, very much.' Next day I met her at a public feast. She was selling her autograph on a piece of yellow ribbon, with the words in the native language. 'Forget me not,' I asked her to write me one on the spot, and she willingly complied. I am never able to remember her name, so I thought the best thing to do was to buy her official signature. She wrote it for me and I asked the price. She said: 'It's $1.25,' which I paid, and here is the signature of the Queen," he said, showing the yellow ribbon.

"A curious comparison might have been made between what might be termed 'civilized' and 'native' cooking. The natives prefer to eat many of their foods perfectly raw. They eagerly devour raw fish, raw onions, raw meat, raw potatoes, and so on, and judging by their physical appearance, they are just as healthy as their white brothers. On the other table was a great feast of white folks, consisting of all the delicacies of the season, served in American style. The tables were waited on by half whites, as they are called; intelligent young ladies who are half-breeds, but far better looking than the average run of people on the islands."—Detroit News-Tribune.

TOO EFFUSIVE A WELCOME.

The friends of a bride and groom played a trick on them the other day that furnished no end of amusement to the neighbors, although the victims probably failed to appreciate the humor of it. The groom had taken a house on Moore street and it was to this that they returned at the conclusion of their wedding trip. In the meantime the jovial friends had gained entrance to the house and had taken a sheet from one of the beds, on this they painted in large, straggling letters: "Welcome Home." Then, with the aid of a rope, they suspended it across the front of the house, from window to window, to the infinite amusement of the neighbors and the delight of a crowd of small children. When the bride and groom drove up, late in the afternoon, they were given such a reception as a bridal couple never before had in that vicinity. What the groom said and what the bride thought can scarcely be printed in cold type.

A WELL-GUARDED RULER.

President Loubet is one of the best-guarded rulers in Europe. A flying brigade of police agents, in civilian costume, has been created to follow the President step by step wherever he goes. When M. Loubet is about to start from the Elysee to the prefecture of police is apprised by telephone of the place to which he is going as well as of the route he is to take. Before he has crossed the gate of the palace a carriage is already in the street, with orders to follow the Presidential conveyance and not to lose sight of it.

ANOTHER $100,000,000-A-YEAR MAN.

Wall street is greatly interested in the latest "self-made" man, Frederic P. Fish, who will draw $100,000 for twelve months' service as president of the American Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company. He was counsel for the New York Airbrake Company against the Westinghouse company after the reorganization of the General Electric Company.

Tourists and visitors should not fail to take a ride on the Pacific Heights Electric Railway. Unsurpassed view of ocean, mountain and valley, and the stretched-out city. Round trip, 10c.

NOTICE TO CUSTOMERS.

THE UNDERSIGNED GROCERS would give notice to their customers and the public in general that after this date monthly settlement will be strictly insisted upon.

All goods purchased in one month must be paid for before the last day of the succeeding month, without exception.
