

NEW SACHS BUILDING FOR BERETANIA ST.

Another new building is to be added to the goodly number of architectural structures that are springing up all over the business portion of the city. It will be located on the Ewa-mauka corner of Fort and Beretania streets, and will be known as the Sachs block, after its builder, N. S. Sachs.

From Fort street an alleyway will extend the entire length of the building, for drays and other conveyances handling goods for the places of business in the different storerooms on the first floor. It is the intention of the builder to allow no more freight or merchandise to be handled through the front of the store than absolute necessity demands.

HONOLULU'S PARCHED THROAT TAKES RIVERS OF SODA WATER

At Least Twenty-Five Thousand Bottles a Day Consumed Here--The Favorite Drinks of Some of the Fiends.

A local fiend on statistics recently figured out the conclusion that the people of Honolulu consume, on an average, 25,000 bottles of soda water, root beer, sarsaparilla and other soft drinks every day. On investigation this seems to be a conservative estimate. An Advertiser reporter yesterday visited the different drug stores where soda, etc., are sold, the ice cream parlors, and several of the small Chinese and Japanese shops, where these drinks are kept on ice, and obtained figures that show that the forty thousand people of the city drink on the average day, over a half of a bottle of some kind of soft drink, to each person.

apple cider which foams plentifully at the top, and is recommended as an anti-obesity specific. The small boys also work the two-straw plan at Honolulu, and O. M. Pond calls frequently for egg phosphates. M. Phillips drinks nothing more than green-dine punches at this place, and Mr. Webb, from the Golden Rule Bazaar, next door, usually refreshes himself with a glass of kono. Mr. Helm, of Pearson & Potter's, being also in the immediate neighborhood, is a frequent visitor during the warm days in quest of a sauerbrunnen with which to quench his thirst.

preference. The Asiatics consume the greater portion of the effervescent, individually drinking much more than the population of other races. Those Chinese and Japanese who patronize the drug stores generally drink ice cream sodas. The Hawaiians are great drinkers of all kinds of phosphate and consume a goodly portion of the ice cream. Probably Honolulu is without a rival in the matter of the consumption of these light and harmless drinks. Picnickers do not consider their lunch hampers complete without an abundant supply of root beer, sarsaparilla and phosphates, and a thriving trade is engineered by energetic small boys who haunt the scenes of picnics in quest of the empty bottles, the rebates upon which bring a harvest of nickels, a liberal share of such profit being re-invested in the same bottled goods, or at the soda fountain. At the estimate given, 25,000 bottles being consumed per day, the bottles emptied of soft drinks daily by Honolulu's population, would make a double lei for the crown of Punchbowl, with enough left over for the crest of Tantalus. The ambitious mathematician might also calculate the effect that if the bottles were used differently, they would, when strung together, and made into harnesses, fit out every strenuous mule working on the lines of Pain's tramway system with harnesses and leas, and enough left over, if broken and scattered on the roadway, to elicit profanity from every bicyclist between Kalihii and Waikiki; or again to several times upon furnish pendants for every electric light on the Pacific Heights line. While in the eastern cities of the United States, the soft drink consumption is perhaps equal to the figures given above, in proportion to the population, yet the consumption in other places than Honolulu goes by seasons, the few warmest days of the summer being the only time of much demand. In Honolulu the temperature is many degrees below those of the eastern cities in their warm seasons, yet the soda and phosphate drinking is perennial. The price of soda varies. In some places five cents buys as good an article as a dime does in others. There is a tremendous profit at five cents, and an octopus profit at ten.
