POI LUNCH GIVEN AT KAALAWAI

THE poi luncheon given Saturday at Kaalawai beach by Miss Irene Dickson in honor of Prince and Princess Kawananakoa, was one of the largest social affairs of the week. The function, Hawaiian in every detail of the edibles and decorations, was admirably carried out, Miss Dickson proving herself a capable and charming hostess. Not only was the feast notable for the presence of princely guests, but the Right Rev. Bishop Nichols of California was there, his toast to the Prince and Princess and his sentiment toward the Hawaiians and the church of which he is such a distinguished member, being graceful and eloquent.

The luau was given at Cecil Brown's seaside cottage at Kaalawai, beyond Diamond Head. The long table was placed in the lanai facing the ocean, and was arranged for the seating of nearly a hundred guests. In the center were large fruit dishes filled with all manner of tropical fruits. All the edible products of the sea known to the Hawaiian luau were there and almost everything eatable that grows and lives upon the islands as well. There were shrimps from the mountains and shrimps from the ocean, luscious pig cooked underground, deep ocean and shallow water fishes, shell fish, sea mosses (limu), and fern tops, the relish used with mountain shrimps. Among the desserts were kulolo, haupia, koelepalau, kukui nut and cocoanut relishes. Two rows of beautifully polished calabashes bordered the table just beyond the plates of the guests.

The two lanai chandeliers were artistically decorated with twigs of malle, and long ropes of malle and palapala ferns, braided, were festooned and hung from the ceiling, drooping over the center of the table. Around the lanai were potted palms. The window posts were entwined with leis. Red, white and blue bunting draped around the walls and before the windows, serving both as a decoration and as a shield against the sun. The entrance was draped with Hawaiian and American flags caught up on either side like portieres. Behind the guests of honor was a splendid Hawaiian flag. From the entrance to the gate opening upon the beach, a red and white striped awning formed a covered way, beneath which the guests sat after the luau and listened to the native melodies sung and played by Hawaiian musicians. As the guests arrived, each was decorated with a lei by Miss Dickson. She was assisted at the function by Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Brown. Bishop Nichols paid a pretty compliment to the lady who decorated him with a second lei.

During the progress of the luau Bishop Nichols proposed the health of the Prince and Princess and said he was glad to have the opportunity to meet the Hawaiians on their own soil. He was glad to meet them socially although he had come here officially. In California the great bond of union between his diocese and Hawaii was that one of his clergy had performed the last sad rites over King Kalakaua before the remains were brought back to the Islands. He knew many Hawaiians in California and therefore he had some idea of the people whom he was to meet, and it pleased him to find that every thing here was even more delightful than he had ever imagined. He hoped that in the course of time the church would be the most potent factor in producing the love and friendship between all residing in the Islands, and that the union of the Hawaiian and American flags would be that which the church most desired to see. He said that though the ocean separated them he felt very near Hawaii because of the people he had met. In concluding, Bishop Nichols said that as a rule when any one had attended a feast they preferred to remain silent after it, but the Hawaiian food seemed to give him a flow of oratory and he felt in duty bound to give vent to his feelings and tell of the enjoyment he had derived. Those invited to the luau were:

Prince and Princess Kawananakoa, Prince and Princess Kalaniana'ole, Bishop Nichols, Miss Nichols, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Parker, Miss Alice Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. Hunt, Mrs. E. D. Tenney, Mrs. N. Runaway Hack Picks Up a Telephone Pole and is no More.

An exciting runaway occurred yesterday afternoon from No. 290 hack stand. A hack in charge of a Portuguese driver named Dias was backed up on by another hack while on the stand and the horse becoming frightened, slipped its bridle and started off at break-neck speed down King street.

The horse turned down Alakea street with a number of bicyclists and pedestrians in pursuit and the rig neatly plucked a barber's pole from the sidewalk in front of the Occidental hotel. Another turn was safely negotiated when Halekaiwela street was reached. Passing the Sailors' Home the hack picked up a telephone pole which proved to be its undoing and a minute later a handsome vehicle lay in the gutter, a pile of junk and kindling wood.

The horse broke loose from the harness and was soon afterwards stopped, quite unharmed.

Alice in Wonderland.

Miss Helen Desha will take the part of Alice at the Kamehameha School entertainment, and other members give promise of making the Hatter, the Mock Turtle, the Griffin and other familiar characters very realistic. If tickets cannot be obtained, the payment of fifty cents at the door will be an open sesame. Light refreshments will be on sale also.

In response to special requests children (with their attendants) will be admitted to the dress rehearsal on the afternoon of Saturday, April 12. Admission for children, twenty-five cents.
