COUSIN OF THE CZAR

Prince Boris Makes a Honolulu Call.

HE COMES ASHORE FOR A GOOD TIME

Talks With a Reporter—Does Not Believe That Big Wars Will Come.

HONOLULU was paid a visit yesterday by one of Russia's royal family. The distinguished guest was Grand Duke Boris, cousin of the present Emperor, Nicholas II, and son of Grand Duke Vladimir, the brother of the late Czar, Alexander III. The Prince is en tour of the world and has been through all the countries of Europe and Asia, and is now on his way to the United States. He is a passenger on the Coptic, which was here yesterday, and the Duke took advantage of the stop to roam with his suite about the streets of Honolulu.

This colon of one of the proudest of the world's royal families frolicked about town with about the same zest as a young man just let loose from his first year at college might. He was gay. But back of that spirit of levity was an inquiring mind which took in everything in sight. When the Duke returned from his trip ashore he did so with a springy step, a smiling face, and every other portion of himself covered with leis which he had bought by the dozen strings from the street flower girls. And he had learned something. While in Japan the Duke was feasted and applauded in great style, the little brown men doing everything in their power in an effort to show how cordial was their feeling for the Czar of the Russias and his people. Everywhere the Prince was showered with honors and in every place he left a good impression.

A reporter found the royal traveler on the promenade deck of the Coptic just before sailing time with his suite around him. To the reporter's greeting and request for an interview the Prince laughed and said: "You American journalists are funny. You jump down on a person everywhere. Do you think you cannot have interviewed me in Russia?" And the Prince and his companions laughed again.

"But this isn't Russia," put in the reporter.

"All right, then, we shall talk," said the Prince, genially. "You ask about prospects of a war between Japan and Russia. Never! Never! We strive for peace. The day of wars is gone. There will never be another big war. Japan and my nation are very friendly. Japan seeks not war. We do not want war. War is so improvable with us. Let us talk of something probable. Now I think it probable I will be good friends with Americans. I am much interested in your country. If the samples I have of it are the same as the great portion of the country I will like it much. We have samples of your people in Russia. Many noted beauties and well known women in Russia were American girls who married into our families. They are charming, being beautiful, and able to use their heads as well as men can. And I have seen a sample of your country—Honolulu. It's a fine place. It must be prosperous, and if I find America exactly like it, or even a little poorer, I will go away quite satisfied. O, pardon, but let us listen to the band. If I haven't told you enough you can imagine some more. You have heard of Oriental fakirs. I met lots of them in India, but I regret to say the American correspondents in the Orient are much superior to them. They could work their imaginations into believing that Russia may go to war with the moon in order to get that country or whatever it is as a goose pasture—but I fear I am using one of your oldest expressions. Let us listen to the band, Mr. Reporter; the music, I love music; you know. War with Japan—Never!"

The Prince, beaming with smiles and with the breeze chasing his little streaky black moustache over his face, jumped to the rail and peered over at the American citizens—Japs, Chinese, South Sea Islanders, etc.—who surrounded the band down below on the wharf. A moment later and stewards of the Coptic were passing two bottles of beer to each member of the band. The Prince shouted "Here's luck," and the grinning faces of bandsmen looked up to see the Prince grinning at them. A moment later and the band was playing "The Star Spangled Banner." The Prince recognized the air and said "It's the national music," and—shame to the American citizen—the Prince was the only one of the large crowd who took off his hat out of respect to the song and what it represents.

The lines of the Doric were loosed from the wharf and a moment later she was sliding into the stream with

HORNEF'S REMAINS FOUND BY SOLDIERS

Skeleton Believed to Be That of the Missing Jeweler Discovered in the Crater of Diamond Head.

THE crater of Diamond Head yesterday yielded up a mystery which it has held in its embrace for nearly a year. A skeleton was found shortly after 1 o'clock by soldiers from Camp McKinley in the mauka end of the crater, and by nightfall it was fairly well identified as that of Ernest C. Hornef, the jeweler who disappeared mysteriously last September. The remains of the unfortunate man were scattered over a radius of twenty-five feet and some difficulty was experienced in gathering the parts together and bringing them to the police station. The clothing, shoes, hat, necktie and filling in the teeth, together with the identifying statements made by H. F. Wichman, Hornef's former employer, all tend to prove that the gruesome remains were those of Hornef.

The discovery was made by Sergeant Bales, 6th Company Coast Artillery, of Camp McKinley, and another soldier. Both were out exploring around Diamond Head, outside and inside, in quest of ancient burial caves. On going down into the crater from the mauka side they found a skull lying under some klawe bushes. They found other bones scattered around. They took notice of the appearance of the skull, teeth and clothing, and then made haste to return to Camp McKinley, from which they telephoned to the police department.

High Sheriff Brown and Deputy Sheriff Chillingworth went to the crater on horseback, accompanied by Sergeant Bales. The undergrowth was heavy all around the place where the bones were lying and this seemed to indicate that the man had not fallen into the crater as the bushes would have stopped the body farther up the slope. The skull was in one place, the clothing in another, the shoes elsewhere, and the officers believe that dogs or other animals scattered them about.

The skull was lacking the lower jaw, but several teeth were found. One was filled with gold and this was connected by bridge work with another. A lower jaw tooth was filled with amalgam. The clothes were in such poor condition that the officers could not bring them to town. There was a shoe which was of the tan variety and was made by the Hamilton-Brown Co. The officers also found a straw hat with a black ribbon about it, but it was also falling to pieces and could not be taken away. The color of the hair was low, straight, standing type, about a sixteen in size, and the necktie, of black satin, is of the ready made bow kind which fastens with a hook at the back of the collar. The collar and tie are both of the kind usually worn by Hornef. The skull, collar, tie, shoe, teeth, a small tin circular-shaped box, a silk handkerchief, a roller top desk key, a Yale door key No. 26197, and a half pint flask which may have contained liquor or poison, were brought to the police station.

Mr. Wichman was communicated with and gave the Deputy Sheriff sufficient points of identification to lead him to believe that the remains are those of Hornef.

Deputy Sheriff Chillingworth brought all the articles and parts of anatomy to the Advertiser office last night, where a close examination was made of them.

The Duke standing with the captain on the bridge and making extravagant bows and smiles to everyone in sight on the wharf. And if one were inclined to be sore at the man who said "He looks like a dago although he is handsome," one must remember that the Prince was in a happy-go-lucky suit of clothes and is seeing the world in a happy-go-lucky manner. His father, Grand Duke Vladimir, is called the most popular Duke in Europe and the son inherits the same pleasing and gracious manner. The Duke was educated at St. Petersburg and speaks French, German and English in addition to his own language. On his trip he has picked up a slight knowledge of Indian, Chinese and Japanese languages and he speaks English just as any well educated American might speak it.

He serves as a lieutenant in the Czar's Imperial Hussars regiment, known as the Red Hussars. His residence is in Zarskole Solo, near St. Petersburg.

It is expected that the Duke will remain in the States for about two months.

Mr. Wichman was called by telephone and told of wearing apparel worn by Hornef, which tallied fairly well with the exhibits. The most conclusive proof of identity was that of Merle Johnson, of Wichman's store, who came to The Advertiser office and made an inspection. The collar, he said, was of the kind always worn by the missing man and he felt certain that the tie was also the same generally seen upon him. When Mr. Johnson saw the small round tin box he ejaculated:

"There, that is evidence that the remains are those of Mr. Hornef. That is the kind of box in which watch materials are sent out by manufacturers and they are to be found on any watchmaker's bench. Balance wheels, pins and all sorts of parts to watches come in those boxes, and it is not unusual for a watchmaker to carry one around with him. That, if anything, convinces me that the skull is that of Hornef. Hornef was a German and had a large head. The skull is large, as you see, and tallies, as far as I can determine, with Hornef's.

And very large it was. As the skull lay on a desk in The Advertiser office a hat measuring seven and one-eighth inches, was closely fitted to it. Scalp and hair added would have required a hat of seven and a half if not of seven and five-eighths inches.

Hornef disappeared last year in a mysterious way. His house at Kaimuki had burned down and a new one had been built. He had not been in it long before he vanished. A search was made for him in various parts of the city, for it was believed that the man had gone into the hills to commit suicide. The searchers were not rewarded with anything that gave the slightest clue. During this time a skeleton and one or two badly decomposed bodies were found in the hills and valleys around Honolulu, but none were identified as the remains of Hornef.

THE BULLETIN'S PRESS HAS A LARGE PLASTER ON IT

An Uncancelled Mortgage on the Machine Which Prints the Tales of Unrivalled Business Prosperity.

THE records show that the Bulletin Publishing Co. mortgaged its press to the Pacific States Type Foundry on the 1st of June, 1930, during the period when, as it says, "every department was making a dividend." The amount of the mortgage is $1357.50, and the indebtedness is represented by twenty separate notes payable monthly, beginning with the date specified above. The twenty months expired in February, 1932—five months ago—and on the records at the Government building THE MORTGAGE STANDS UNCANCELLED and there is nothing to indicate, which the clerks could find, that any part of it had been satisfied.

Following is a copy of the instrument:

PRINCE CUPID'S PARTY'S METHODS

Ready to Make Coalitions to Secure Good Government, Not Possible With the Home Rulers.

WE want men in the Legislature who will do the right. We don't care whether or not they are haole or natives; so long as they will do the right thing, we will vote for them. With these words Prince Jonah Kalamanoela closed his statement of the ends for which the Hui Kuokoa is striving, and amid cheers of an audience which more than half filled the Orpheum there filed out the participants in the first mass meeting of the new party.

There was a deal of good stuff for those who follow political movements in the meeting, for not only was there a consummate roasting given to Senator Kalaauokalani by John Emmeluth, but there was read the letter from the president of the Home Rulers to a citizen of Laie, which started the row which is now finding its proper culmination in the breaking away of the young men from the old party. Senator David Kanuha, too, added from experience his quota to the record of the leader of the old men's Home Rule, and gave the listeners such an insight into the conditions as would lead to the belief that there will be a fight to the death for the sake of principle by the young men.

When the meeting was called to order there was not a great number of attendants in the chairs, the audience being, in parlance of the theater, top-heavy, owing to the fact that most of the men had sought seats in the gallery. As soon as the applause which greeted the first reference to Prince Cupid had sounded through the entrance way, however, there was a filling up of the seats until much more than half of the house was as full as it might be. Solomon Meheula called for order and stated the reasons for the meeting to be the fact that the young men who had left the Home Rule party wanted the public to know just why they had gone out, and that there are men in the ranks of the old party who are not true, but who are snakes. He said there would be no hard words concerning the old party, only the truth, and he introduced as the first speaker the secretary of the party from its organization until the bolt, J. K. Nakookoo.

Nakookoo began by saying that he had left the Home Rule party because the leaders did not carry out the laws. He went over the history of the party and showed how the men in it were not true to their pledges of doing what was for the good of the people. He said the city and county bill had been carried about by George Markham when it should have been introduced, and that Kalaauokalani had not endeavored to find and bring it in.

He said of Prince Cupid that he had found him a true man and an honest leader and one the people could follow to any end, as his only interest was the benefit of the Hawaiians. The old leaders tried to shut him out and used all kinds of language, for they knew that the reforms which Cupid wanted would rob Kalaauokalani of his power. This led up to the reading of the letter from Kalaauokalani which was found at Laie, and which caused the breach between the Senator and the Prince. The letter is as follows, the name of the receiver being omitted:

Honolulu, June 21st, 1932.

"Your favor of the 18th inst. at hand and contents noted. Yes, I believe you ought to be a candidate for Representative in place of Emmeluth, because he was one of your candidates last time. Have your name put up for delegate and as well for representative at the meeting. Young Mossman, J. K. Paele, S. K. Mahoe and J. P. Makainal, yourself and one haole would fill the seats. For Senators there are only three candidates for the coming campaign: S. K. Pua or J. P. Makainal, J. M. Poepeo and perhaps J. O. Carter. Let the convention to decide upon the nominees.

"As regards the enrollment list of the precinct club of our party, do not sign right away, but wait until the convention meets, because this is an important question. Probably this is a matter which will bring disaster upon the community. Let the convention pass upon the proposition. If we let this committee carry on the work without some consideration it might turn out to be a snake. This committee probably wants to find out the number of Home Rulers and turn them into the ranks of the Democrats, because his brother, Prince D. Kawananakoa, is a Democrat, and I believe this Prince is one also.

"This committee is a committee from the executive committee to raise interest. That is, this committee is to go to the different districts to teach the Home Rule members to be steadfast. They were not told to go and enroll, and thereby let some other parties do their work while they stay home and hide themselves. By this it looks as though there were other men back of this, and I think it is something like a snake. Therefore you must stand firm about this and let it be as though it was your own instead of being from me. Leave this subject until the convention sits.

"I want you and Nehemia Hailpoo to run as delegates and not Keanu. I am instructing Keanu and others who are cringing you to be as one. Elect delegates for mama's society. Have no fear. Come to this convention. Here are the subjects: Delegate to America, Wilcox. Vice president for the Home Rule party, Wilcox.

"Confer with the members of the executive committee except the rice Prince, Carlos Long, Epi Kane and Solomon Kallipoi.

"The delegate and Kalaauokalani opine will leave June 14 and arrive here June 25th. Our regards, etc. I am yours.

(Signed) D. KALAUOKALANI.

Nakookoo said that he and the Prince were the committee and the letter showed that there was no honesty in the leaders. There was an outburst of applause when Nakookoo finished and one enthusiast in the body of the house moved that there be an interpreter who would tell the haoles present what was said. Owing to the length of the program this was denied, but it was said that there would be a speech in English. John Wise was introduced and he went over the history of the convention and the bolt and told how Prince Cupid had gone into the Home Rule party for the good of the people and any other view was erroneous. He closed by saying that the new party would do the best by the people though the heavens should fall.

John Emmeluth made the address in English. He began by a partial review of the conditions in the last Legislature, saying that the measures which the party was pledged to carry were not even touched in some in-
