CAMARINOS HELD A WAKE

Last Night of the Little Bohemian Beer Resort.

'Twas a "very touching" scene. Camarinos was pau. There were tears in the eyes and foam on the lips of a happy-yet-mournful crowd of tropical bohemians who had assembled to do honor at the wake of Gambrinus. And when the wake finished at an early hour in the morning it would have taken a hundred rounds from a pom-pom gun to wake the boys who were in at the finish of the famous beer house. Although the guests were somewhat saddened by the event, Camarinos was as happy as a school boy who has just thrown his slate and pencil into a brook.

Camarinos' garden, at the corner of King and Alakea streets, for a year has been one of the most interesting places in Honolulu. It has been practically the only resort of the semi-bohemian crowd of the town. They gathered there on hot evenings and on the little back verandas of the place, seated about small tables, discussed the events of the day and of days many years gone by. A pipe story was always welcome. They got beer for ten cents a glass and the schooners rolled in there were many pilots to meet them. Cargo discharging was done in record time and vessels were sent away to come back quickly with other large loads. People who were literary and some who were not gathered there to tell of old times. "I was with Dana on the New York Sun," said an ancient scribe one day. "And I," said a Honolulu man, "was with Marshall on the Volcano." A toast would then be drunk in silence to the memory of the dead. "Did I ever tell you of the days when I 'humped the bluey' from Sydney to Brisbane?" "This place reminds me of Higgins' in Boston." "More like the old Snake Inn on the Derbyshire moors."

But all good things come to an end. Camarinos, the best natured mortal in the world, a happy-go-lucky bohemian whose faults are few if he has any, had to squeeze the life out of his year old but very healthy baby by closing his doors for the last time last night. He had all the bohemian crowd there. They admired his draperies of black mourning. They admired him. And last but not least they admired and consumed the last drop of beer on the premises. "The gang" thought the occasion so very touching that it would be an insult to their host if they did not end the wake by consuming the very last drops of their schooners of sorrow.

Camarinos could not get a license to run longer than a year. The year was up last night. Camarinos' babe which was just commencing to speak a little in beery accents has gone aloft.

Camarinos' gardens are pau.

TERMS FOR THE PACIFIC CABLE

Following is an editorial in the New York Tribune:

It is scarcely credible that serious objection will be made to the conditions named by the President for the laying of the Pacific cable. They are only reasonable terms. They are also in the main essential to the safeguarding of American interests in this important enterprise. Some of those to which it is intimated—without, we must hope, adequate authority—objection will be made are those which seem to be most necessary. If the chief ends of the cable laying, apart from private profit, are to be attained.

For example, there is the requirement
