WATERFRONT

There was something more than usually inspiring in the departure of the United States army transport Logan for the Philippines yesterday afternoon. A big crowd gathered at the Naval docks to see the ship off and there was plenty of entertainment for all. The Hawaiian Government band under the leadership of Captain Berger was stationed on the upper deck and gave a concert lasting over an hour. Mrs. Alapai was present and sang several solos. Besides Hawaiian music the band rendered medleys of patriotic songs which "caught on" with the crowd. "Dixie" was the prime favorite, without question; it always is with the army people, and a wave of cheers swept through the crowded decks almost with the first note. The song was played twice during the concert and each time the applause was enthusiastic.

All the freight was out early and all the coal aboard so that there was no crush of trucks and no cloud of coal dust to mar the sailing of the big ship. Everything was in readiness and all that was necessary was to wait for the stroke of six bells. Everything was in readiness but not everybody. Just as the Logan was backing along the dock two passengers appeared at the gates of the dock and started on a hot sprint down the pier. Encouraged by the cheers of the crowd they dashed by the edge of the wharf and leaped on top of the canvas chute through which the refuse of the galley is dumped. They were pulled through a porthole just in time.

The scene when the band played the Star Spangled Banner just before the Logan sailed was most impressive. On one side the great white troopship loomed up like some great sea monster. Above her yellow superstructure with its tangle of boats, ventilator hoods and glistening rails rose the giant funnel, ringed with red, white and blue, belching forth volumes of inky smoke. On one of the masts floated the "blue Peter" signifying that the vessel was about to depart. Along the rails of the upper deck amidships was a crowd of army officers with a little knot of women adding color to the picture. Along the main deck rail, fore and aft was packed a mass of men in khaki and blue—the men one hears little of, but who make up the backbone of military power—the men who fight and win battles.

Across the dock, where was gathered a motley throng was the gunboat Petrel, looking like a tubboat alongside the towering transport. Her white sides barely topped the high pier but from her rail there projected ugly looking muzzles that told of gallant work at Manila in '98. Figsy thought she may be one shot from one of those wicked-looking black tubes would send her gigantic sister hurtling down to a watery grave.

Out in the harbor the Bear and the Patterson were lying at anchor in Naval row and beyond rose a small forest of the masts of merchant vessels. In the background was the mass of mountains heaped one upon the other as if by some giant hand. In front the big flag of the Naval station drooped lazily against its tall staff.

The skies were overcast when the band rose to play the Star Spangled Banner. With the first note of the big steamer came to attention and hats came off. Across the dock the little group of jacksies in white lounging on the fore deck of the Petrel scrambled to their feet and stood at attention. Nearly every man on the dock unconsciously straightened up and almost every hat came off. It was a wonderfully impressive sight—almost two thousand men standing motionless and reverently silent while the inspiring strains of the national song, born amid the shock of battle nearly a century ago, floated out on the still air. With the last notes the clouds broke and the sun came out lighting up the fore of Old Glory as, caught by a sudden breeze it streamed out from its staff.

Then the big ship began slowly to back out from the dock, the last farewell were shouted across the rapidly widening space between ship and shore. The regimental band stationed on the quarter-deck thumped out patriotic airs as the transport swung out into the stream. From the Petrel's signal yard suddenly there blossomed out a string of vari-colored flags, wishing the Logan, in the language of the sea, bon voyage while from the transport came an answering "Thank you." The big white voiced a last salute and the big white troopship passed down the channel and out towards the setting sun bearing a thousand American soldiers to serve their country, perhaps to die for her in a far away land.

SHIPPING NOTES.

The liner Aorangi sailed at 10 o'clock yesterday morning for Victoria and Vancouver.

The ship John Ena arrived at Hilo Wednesday, 23 days from Shanghai, the record for that trip.

The Iroquois towed the schooner Lavinia to Pearl Harbor yesterday and the buoying work was begun.

The China did not arrive last night, as was expected by many, but will probably put in an appearance this morning. She brings 300 tons of freight and will take away quite a number of passengers.

Despite the report that the Chilean ship Othello would not get away for Victoria yesterday, she was able to sail in the afternoon. The master of the vessel produced Anton Milazzo, the sick sailor whose hospital expenses he refused to pay and the immigration officials allowed the vessel to sail. Milazzo will be taken to Victoria with the ship.
