THRUM FINDS ANCIENT HAWAIIAN PLACE OF WORSHIP

Steps Will be Taken to Preserve the Old Ruins.

In the course of his researches in following up the story of the massacre of the men from the Daedalus, and the myth of Kaopulupulu, Mr. Thos. G. Thrum has discovered a heiau, or Hawaiian temple, of the old days whose existence has heretofore been altogether unknown to island antiquarians although it is within easy reach from one of the main traveled roads on Oahu, and it would seem might have been found long ago. The temple, moreover, is in a fair state of preservation, and with little expense could be restored and kept as a typical worshipping place of the olden time.

The old temple is near Waianae Point, on the Waiialua side, and within plain sight of the ridge although surrounded with a rather dense growth of lantana. It lies about four miles beyond the Haleiwa Hotel, and so could be seen easily by all tourists visiting that resort. Indeed, Landlord Bidgood of the hotel, who went with Mr. Thrum to find the temple, has already agreed to have the lantana cleared away from the old walls, and steps are likewise in contemplation to preserve it.

"I was looking into the legend of Kaopulupulu, and also seeking for some light on the landing place of the men from Vancouver's store ship Daedalus, who were massacred in 1792," said Mr. Thrum yesterday, "when I found the old heiau. The legend of Kaopulupulu I explored. If you will look at Thrum's annual for 1904, you will find on page 107 this: 'At early dawn Kaopulupulu arose and partook of food till satisfied, after which he prepared himself for the journey before him. As he gave his farewell greeting to his household, he set toward Puanue, where was a temple for priests only, called Kohokuwelowelo.'"

Kaopulupulu, as it appears, was the kahuna who had prophesied the coming of the strange people from the sea. "I did not believe that there was any temple exclusively for priests in the region described," went on Mr. Thrum, "but there are temples at Waianae, and so I looked for one there and found this. As for the Daedalus massacre, the story goes that the bodies of Lieut. Hergest and Mr. Gooch, killed by Kol's people, were taken to a temple somewhere inland. But I should say it was probably the temple on the flat above this one, as it was a larger and probably more important heiau. "One peculiar thing about the temple, is that the corners of the walls seems to have been torn away. The native who showed me the place, although the matter had not occurred within his memory, told me that the stones from the temple were taken by workmen to mend the road below. This is a rather strange statement, for the reason that there were other and better stones for the purpose closer at hand. It seems to me more likely that the walls were thus thrown down to mark the entire abandonment of the old idol worship, and the ascendancy of the new religion." The dimensions of the celebrated Ka-wahae temple on Hawaii are 224x100 feet, while the new one found by Mr. Thrum measures 266x110.

RACIAL PECULIARITIES.

Prisoners in Morocco must pay the policeman who arrested them for his trouble in taking them to jail. The Zulus, after a fight, expose their wounds to the air, having found by experience that this is the quickest cure for them. The Veddahs, or wild hunters of Ceylon, pound fibers of decayed wood with honey, which they eat when meat is not obtainable. Japanese dolls are often elaborately and gorgeously attired, for families keep these toys, and pass them down to their descendants. The silk brocades for the tiny robes are specially woven in miniature patterns on small looms.

THE RECENT EARTHQUAKES IN SWITZERLAND. Three miles from Chamonix the road was split for a long distance. The stone-built wall was much shaken.

HOTEL STREET FLOWER MARKET

It is said the trade in flowers on Hotel street, Memorial Day, amounted to more than $500. On some steamer days the trade reaches as high as $300. A business of such proportions would seem to warrant the establishment of a special market place where the vendors might have shelter and conduct their merchandising in a systematic manner, at the same time allowing pedestrians full use of the sidewalks on Hotel street, which are none too wide. The idea of giving the flower women a place for themselves was broached some time ago, but it lacked a practical initiative. There are several available storerooms in or near the center of the city where the flower women could make a display of their wares free from the dust or mud of the street and offer conveniences to their patrons that they cannot do now. Customers do not like to stand in the rain or hot sun or be jostled by the passing street crowds.

There are some 75 women and girls following this sentimental vocation, doing more good and shedding more brightness over life than can be estimated. Most of them cultivate their flowers at their homes in Nuuanu valley. Often at the break of day they may be seen disposing themselves at various stations along the shady side of Hotel street, spreading their mats and watering their flowers. During the hours when trade is slack they recline on the mats for a siesta, smoke cigarettes or busy themselves with lei making, generally laughing and chatting as they work.

That part of Hotel street between Nuuanu and Fort, where the flower market straggles, is getting to be a very busy neighborhood. The circulation of pedestrians, wagons, carriages and cars is increasing in that narrow section and the women are found to be more and more in the way. It has been suggested that a hui be formed and a place rented for the sale of flowers. In such a market, nothing but flowers should be sold and, to preserve the local traditions of the business and protect the interests of those who have built up the flower trade and maintained it as a distinguishing feature of tourist attractions, only Hawaiians should be allowed the privilege of selling there.—Paradise.
