

IMITATION

is the sincerest flattery."

And we have decided to imitate one of our good friends who sold a home to one of his young friends on monthly instalments without the usual large cash payment to begin with. We have just two places to offer on such favorable terms now—and we want the buyer to mean business: to be so in earnest in his desire to acquire a home that he will be willing to economize in non-essentials, and to bend every energy to reduce his indebtedness as rapidly as may be conveniently possible. We would prefer that he be a married man—or at least have early intentions in that direction. Such a young man deserves to be helped in his desire to acquire a home for himself—and we are willing to help him.

"MAN OF THE HOUR" WILL MEET DEMANDS

There was a good rehearsal of "The Man of the Hour" at the Opera House last night, notwithstanding the fact that the cast was short several members. The story is a good one, abounding in crisp situations, with a weave of comedy crossing the woof of drama. But there is nothing spectacular, nothing sensational, merely the story of a young college chap forced into politics to serve the ends of a boss and the man "higher up," but who keeps his promise and his oath and downs the men who tried to use him.

As the college-bred mayor, W. D. Adams impersonates Mayor McClellan, around whom the story is written. A. E. Murphy does the part of Horrigan, "the boss," with care and studiousness that will delight his audience. Miss Nellie McLain, always sparkling, appears to better advantage in this than any play presented here in which she has had a part. Major Potter, if one may judge from an ordinary rehearsal, at which none is at his best, has the "fat" of the play and essays the role of Alderman Phelan with a fidelity worthy a professional. Other parts deserving special mention are those assigned to Mrs. Webb and Messrs. Emery, Wilder, Webb and Connors. Mrs. McLennan, who plays the part of the mother of the Mayor, was not present, but in past rehearsals she has done well.

The play is to be given on June 11 and 13 at the Opera House under the direction of W. D. Adams, for the benefit of the transpacific yacht Hawaii.
