ISSUES THAT WILL PRESS CONGRESS.

Writing in the Denver News, Senator Thomas M. Patterson says that when congress meets—if no extra session is called—two issues will press for consideration and will be "played against each other." The senator explains: "The senate will be complainant in the matter of tariff reform, and will roll that profound proposition up the difficult hill of unlimited debate. But nothing worth while will be accomplished, because the speaker of the house and the speaker's committee on rules will 'stand pat.' The public will get the benefit of the tariff debate—nothing more. Radical action by Germany, Canada or some other important market might modify this plan. But the play will be made as outlined unless the hand of the party is forced by action abroad. The other topic—one close to the president's heart—is the regulation of railway rates by the enlargement of the powers of the interstate commerce commission or the creation of a special court, with power to set, placing the burden of appeal upon the railroad. On this proposition the position of the two houses is reversed. But despite this change of position, the play of the leaders is the same. The house will save the face of the party by passing, with marked enthusiasm, a bill which embodies the president's views and even the majority of democrats will be forced to support it. In the Senate this bill will go to committee, and when it emerges therefrom—very late in the session—it will be 'talked to death' or amended, the amendments being so constructed as to insure opposition in the house."

Senator Patterson points out as interesting facts that the house of representatives stands with the president as regards railway rates, but against him as regards the tariff, while the senate is against him on the question of railway rates and may support his views on tariff reform. Senator Patterson concludes: "the making of laws is a legislative function and not an executive but so far as it is right for him to do so it is certain that the influence of the president will be steadily exerted in favor of these two policies. He has an immense popularity which has lately been increased by his success in bringing about peace between Russia and Japan, and the question is whether the president with his personal popularity and the support of the great bulk of the people can bring congress around to his way of thinking."
