

MADRIGAL.

When all is said and sung what is the sum? Love, only love! What brightest dream hath youth of years to come? Love, only love! What retrospect turn dim eyes latest from? Love, only love! What word sounds sweetest in the poet's rhyme? Love, only love! What tales first told in some forgotten clime, From heart to heart thro' through the lapse of time? Love, only love! The guide-star of the soul's divine endeavor. Love, only love! The bond of lives which death can not discover; The litany the seraphs sing forever— Love, only love! —Charles L. Hildreth in New York World.

How W. D. Howells Writes Novels. I never have more than one novel on hand at a time, though I may now and then write a sketch of travels by way of a change. I have, of course, a general idea of what I am going to write before I begin a novel, but I do not analyze a plan and think it up in chapters before hand. All I have at the beginning is the general idea. I invent chapters and incidents as I go along. Thus, each morning consists of new inventions, and the work is pleasant and does not grow stale. When I first began to write I had great trouble as to the plot, and I worried over my incidents and conversations. I could not make the people talk. I afterwards found that the reason why I could not do this was because I had nothing to say myself.

If a man has ideas and experiences he finds his conversations coming easily, in the illustration of them. If he has nothing to say he finds the talk as flat as that of two people who are thrown together with not an interest in common. I have little trouble with my conversations now, and the plot is a bugbear no longer. As to my incidents I feared for some time that my fictitious ones would not be as natural as those which had actually existed. This fear was allayed by a friend of mine who took my "Wedding Journey" and marked with a pencil the incidents which he considered real and those he thought I had invented. He mixed up truth and invention to a wonderful extent. —"Carp's" Interview in Cleveland Leader.

Carriages at the National Capital. I see more varieties of carriages here than in any city of the globe, perhaps. The patent pavements of the town allow carry-alls, chariots, hercules, hansoms, bicycles, gigs, tandem teams and what not. The great old rolling carriage called the landau is not as often seen as formerly. Considerable private equipage is in Washington. With all this show there is a fair democratic conservatism among the new strangers. I heard rather a pretty story not long ago of a major-general of the British army who came here on a visit from India, and a prominent man, who was not in politics, to whom the stranger brought a letter, put him in his fine carriage and took him everywhere. The Englishman said one day: "I see that some of these carriages have drivers in livery suits while yours has not."

"No, sir," said the man; "I never put my driver in livery, because I have a little superstition in it. I am a speculator, and have my ups and downs, and it occurred to me that some day or other I might be poor, and that my son might have to drive one of these carriages; and I think I would not like to see him in that kind of livery uniform." The Englishman, it is said, took his acquaintance warmly by the hand and said that he had been looking in America, ever since he landed in San Francisco, for an American, but up to that time he had seen nothing but Englishmen in the country. —"Gath" in Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Flower Trade of London. The flower trade of London is estimated at a value of £5,000 a day, and is showing a rapid increase with every season. The great metropolis not only draws its varied supplies of flowers and plants from its own southwestern counties with their mild and equable climate, but reaches out to France and Italy for its collections of the choicest and most costly specimens. There is a regular flower train between Nice and Cannes to London in the early spring, but the immense cost of this transportation has led to the formation of great establishments in the united kingdom for the supply of this lucrative demand.

The largest one of the kind is situated on an estate at Carmarthen, in south Wales, belonging to Capt. Mansfield, of the royal navy. There are a great many separate buildings for the cultivation of different plants. Thus there are no less than 300,000 lilies of the valley in the hothouses, with roses, camellias, carnations, pansies, jasmines and heliotropes in like proportions. There are eighteen large forcing houses that, with the appendices, form 300,000 feet of glass, with six miles of pipes. —San Francisco Chronicle.

Alexander Stephens and His Pistol. Col. John A. Stephens says that Alexander H. Stephens never carried a pistol but rose in his life, and that was when he was a boy. Long years ago, when waggon-trails were more common in Georgia, Mr. Stephens started to Augusta with some wiggins. He was a small boy then and carried a pistol. When the crowd stopped to camp, "Alack" put his pistol under his head to have it handy in case robbers should appear. The next morning his breeches were gone, and as the youthful Stephens awoke in the dawn and missed his pantaloons, he was so disgusted with the service his pistol had failed to do that he swore he would never carry another weapon. It developed that some man in the camp had taken the breeches to tease the boy, and they were soon restored to the owner. —Chicago Tribune.

Watt's "Sun and Planet" Engine. A "Sun and Planet" engine, designed by James Watt, has still a place in the famous brewery of Messrs. Whitebread & Co., in Chiswell street, London, and is still performing the duty for which it was constructed in 1785. Though there have been alterations to increase its power, all the principal parts remain as they were originally manufactured. A metal tablet affixed to the engine gives an account of its invention and history. —Exchange.

If Gladstone Were Only Funny. Professor Blackie, in a recent speech, after declaring that "all Scotchmen worth a button have a sense of humor," exclaimed: "Would to God that my beloved friend, Mr. Gladstone, had a sense of humor." —Chicago Herald.

United States Senator Philletta Sawyer, the Wisconsin lumber millionaire, has adopted a saw-log as a coat-of-arms. —Chicago Journal.

CALIFORNIA WINES.

The growth and manufacture of pure wines in California has surprised the most sanguine. Although small manufacturers, through combined ignorance and carelessness, turn out inferior wines, it has been the ambition of

THE DAILY HERALD.

To-day, September 1st, 1886, is issued the first number of THE DAILY HERALD, a morning newspaper, to be printed for the proprietor under contract by the "Press Publishing Company," Merchant street, Honolulu.

Price Six Dollars per Annum or Fifty Cents per Month.

All who receive a copy of the initial or any succeeding number are respectfully

INVITED TO SUBSCRIBE.

Business men are solicited to test the advantages of THE DAILY HERALD as an ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

A large edition will be printed each day, to be circulated in Honolulu and throughout the Islands, regardless of subscriptions, until a regular paying list of subscribers is obtained on the public becoming acquainted with the merits of the paper.

The DAILY HERALD will furnish a fresh and readable record of events in city and country. It will also give, from time to time as received, a summary of the latest news from the outside world, in concise and systematic form.

The DAILY HERALD will follow a straightforward, consistent, independent and moderate course in the discussion of public affairs. It will not be the servile organ of any clique, faction or party. At the same time an earnest support will be given to measures promotive of the public welfare, and to individuals or organizations that may appear in the political field, with claims to popular confidence backed by worthy records and unassailable principles.

The undersigned would, however, rather point to his record as a journalist in this city for the past two years, as conductor of the Daily Bulletin, than make promises that, in general estimation, are valueless until justified by performance. He can only pledge himself to do his best to produce a thorough, an influential, and in every way acceptable, daily newspaper.

Try the "Daily Herald" for a month at least.
