Some people have a queer conception of the duties of officers. Monday evening Sheriff McPherson received a telegram from Mrs. Eva Haines, who resides near the nature of the 'wreck.' 'Come quick to the home of the late Mitchell Powers.' The sheriff didn't know whether a murder had been committed, whether an insane person was loose or whether there was just an ordinary family row on. He thought, owing to the imperative demands of the telegram, that he had better investigate, and in company with Deputies Garvey and Wildman he drove to the Powers home. There he found Mrs. Haines and her mother, but no one else, and was mad enough to swear when he heard the nature of the wreck. Mrs. Haines is the daughter of the late Mr. Powers, and through her father received considerable property, the control of which, it seems, has caused some trouble between herself and husband.
