

A HORRIBLE LEGACY

THE DREADFUL INHERITANCE OF AN INDIANA HOTEL KEEPER.

For Years He Endeavored to Get Rid of It, But in Vain—How He Finally Met With Success.

The inheritance of Thomas E. Lawes, proprietor of Hotel Taft, Durkirk, Ind., was anything but an enviable one.

"Until a few years ago," he says, "I was a man to be pitied. For more than ten years I was a paralytic hardly able to use my hands and with my eyes so affected by the disease that I could not recognize my friends across the room.

"But you did succeed."

"I did, and the credit is all due to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People."

Mr. Lawes is a substantial citizen of Durkirk, proprietor of the best hotel in that section and is highly respected among his large circle of acquaintances.

"The fact that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People cured this stubborn case, as they have cured others equally severe, leaves no room for doubt but that they will cure lesser troubles arising from disordered nerves.

DR. WOOD'S INFIRMARY

DR. WOOD'S MARSHALLOTOWN, IA. DON'T GO BLIND DON'T GO DEAF

DR. WOOD of Marshalltown can cure you. He is curing hundreds by his new dissolvent method. His remedies are mild and painless.

TESTIMONIALS

R. J. HILL, Alden, Ia., writes: "Dr. Wood cured me of granulated lids when other doctors failed."

JAMES HILL, Marshalltown, Ia., writes: "Was cross eyed for many years. Dr. Wood straightened my eyes in two minutes without pain."

B. A. MORGAN Wholesale and Retail Druggist

MOB RULE IS FEARED

Killing of a Union Man at Racine Arouses Wrath of Workmen.

Shooting Was the Outcome of a Lockout at the Case Plow Works.

Police Protection of the Plant Demanded—News of the Day.

Racine, Wis., April 12.—Attacks on the jail and the J. I. Case plow works by a mob are feared as the result of the shooting of a union molder by a non-union employe yesterday afternoon.

The shooting was the outcome of the lockout by the Case company of its union molders, and union men of all trades are aroused over the affair.

Howard Fristo, of Bourbon, Ind., aged 25 years, and a non-union molder employed at the Case works, when returning from work yesterday, was followed by August Reiman and August Kall, union molders who were locked out.

State street, where the shooting took place, was crowded, and the shooting caused a panic. Women fainted and men sought places of safety.

When Reiman fell to the ground and Fristo started to run away an angry mob followed, hurling rocks and stones at the assailant, who was running through the open shells from the revolver and, reloading it, turned upon his followers and threatened to shoot them.

Reiman was shot thru the left arm above the elbow, in the abdomen, and thru his hat, the last bullet grazing the skull.

Reiman had trouble with a non-union molder three months ago. While following one of the men who had taken the place of the locked out molder, an attempt was made to draw a revolver on Reiman, and a fight followed.

ANNOUNCES INTENTION TO DIE.

Chicago, April 12.—Despondent over her inability to secure employment and without friends in Chicago, Emily Reha, 21 years old, yesterday took a suicidal course, the police say, with suicidal intent.

EMPELLED BY ALBION COLLEGE.

Chicago Student and Two Companions Given Their Term Fees.

Albion, Mich., April 12.—Three students, John R. Smith, of Chicago, Charles A. Darwin, of Detroit, and George L. Yapple, of Mendon, Mich., were paid back their term fees by Dr. Dickie this forenoon and told to sever their connection with the college for the rest of this year.

MAKES RICH FIND IN PEARL.

Wisconsin Fisherman Sells Gem of Rare Quality for $1,500.

Lacrosse, Wis., April 12.—The find of a pearl of the purest quality has enabled G. Nodenica, a poor fisherman living below here, to pay up his debts and start life anew.

THRASHED BY HIS AFFIANCED.

St. Joseph Girl Objects to Her Lover Going With Another.

St. Joseph, Mich., April 12.—Peter McGraw, of Benton Harbor, was thrashed here last night by his fiancée, Miss Pearl Walker, assisted by Miss Helen Ibell, a muscular young lady.

MYSTERY IN MAN'S ASSAULT.

Illinois Victim May Die Without Regaining Consciousness.

Kansas City, Mo., April 12.—Richard Olson, aged 32 years, who recently came here from Moline, Ill., was found staggering along the streets at an early hour Friday morning with blood trickling down his face.

ANGERED BY DEPEW

Southern Senators Didn't Like Chauncey's Speech on Popular Election Question.

The Attack on Election Laws of Mississippi Presented by Mr. Money.

Other Southern Senators Devote Considerable Time to the Subject.

Washington, April 12.—Some remarks which Mr. Depew, of New York, made Thursday concerning the proposed amendment to the constitution providing for the election of senators by popular vote, in the course of which he adverted to southern election methods, precipitated a lively three-hour debate in the senate Friday.

Mr. Money, of Mississippi, to whose state reference had been made by the New York senator, replied tartly to some of the statements of Mr. Depew and defended the suffrage clauses in the Mississippi constitution.

THE VALUE OF A KISS

Mrs. Stayton, of Richland Center, Wis., Wants $15,000 for Three Smacks Surprisingly Taken—Court Room Crowded at the Trial.

Richland Center, Wis., April 12.—Are three kisses, alleged to have been taken from Mrs. Sarah Stayton by David G. James, former G. A. R. department commander of this state, worth $15,000? This is the question which a jury has to determine some time today and which has brought every farmer and his wife for miles around to this city.

Robert Stayton and his wife, on Jan. 1, 1901, were engaged by Defendant James to run his farm three miles from here.

Mr. Money, of Mississippi, then took occasion to reply to some extent to the remarks of Mr. Depew made yesterday concerning the resolution providing for the election of senators by popular vote.

FRANCE WELCOMES INVITATION.

Will Take Part in Dedication of Rochambeau Statue at Washington.

Paris, April 12.—The United States ambassador in Paris, Mr. DeLoane, has received the official invitation of the United States asking France to participate in the dedication at Washington, May 24, of the statue of Count de Rochambeau and has presented it to the foreign minister, M. Delcasse, who will submit it to the cabinet.

EDINBURGH HONORS AMERICANS.

Edinburgh, April 12.—At the graduation ceremony at the university here the honorary degree of doctor of laws was conferred on Professor William James of Harvard and President Jacob Gould Schurman of Cornell University.

DREIBUND IN OLD FORM.

Vienna Paper on Eve of Buelow's Departure Makes Statement.

Vienna, April 12.—The German imperial chancellor, Count von Buelow, started for Berlin yesterday. According to the Neue Freie Presse, the dreibund and I never found its equal for the fact that it would not be wise to replace the present satisfactory arrangements by others of a more experimental character.

RURAL MAIL BOXES.

Commission Recommends Use of Any Box Meeting Certain Standard Requirements.

Washington, April 12.—The commission of postal experts which has been investigating the question of rural free delivery routes has submitted its report to the postmaster general.

Good for Rheumatism.

Last fall I was taken with a very severe attack of muscular rheumatism which caused me great pain and annoyance.

Wants to Help Others.

"I had stomach trouble all my life," says Edw. Mecher, of Union Bottling Works, Erie, Pa., "and tried all kinds of remedies, trying to get a moment's peace. Finally I took Kodol Dyspepsia Cure and I never found its equal for stomach trouble and gladly recommend it." It cures all stomach troubles. It digests what you eat. George P. Poyers.

CHANGES ARE NEEDED

Gen. Schofield Endorses the Bill to Create a General Staff.

Believes There is no Room for Two Commanders of the Army.

Declares the Military Is Not Scientifically Organized—Sensational Testimony.

Washington, April 12.—The report of the testimony given before the senate committee on military affairs by General Schofield, formerly the commanding general of the army, on the bill to create a general staff, was made public today. He endorsed the bill, saying that he had long since come to the conclusion that there is no room under our constitution for two commanders, and that the president, whom the constitution makes the supreme commander, must act thru the secretary of war.

General Schofield—They are not speaking terms.

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

CHANGES ARE NEEDED

Gen. Schofield Endorses the Bill to Create a General Staff.

Believes There is no Room for Two Commanders of the Army.

Declares the Military Is Not Scientifically Organized—Sensational Testimony.

Washington, April 12.—The report of the testimony given before the senate committee on military affairs by General Schofield, formerly the commanding general of the army, on the bill to create a general staff, was made public today. He endorsed the bill, saying that he had long since come to the conclusion that there is no room under our constitution for two commanders, and that the president, whom the constitution makes the supreme commander, must act thru the secretary of war.

General Schofield—They are not speaking terms.

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."

General Schofield—No, sir. You will have to get rid of that intolerable condition by which this man close to the president, the only man who is available to do these things, is a man whom the president does not talk to except to criticize him. The result is bad—very bad. The president feels the need of such a man, as did the presidents whom I have known. The would say: "I can not do these things. I must have a military man to help me." Then in that situation he perhaps sends for Colonel or Major so-and-so, and he finds that he is a bright young fellow and he knows about these things, and in a few days it gets to be known that "Tom so-and-so is commanding the army."