

CHRISTMAS TURKEY NOT TO BE SO HIGH

Popular Fowl is Lower in Price This Year Than It Was Last

OTHER MEAT ABOUT THE SAME

Chickens, Ducks and Geese are a Little Higher—Big Array of Tempting Fruits for the Epicurean—Hot House Vegetables in the Market—Other Edibles for the Christmas Table.

With the upward trend in price that all edibles and food stuffs have taken during recent months, it may be of consolation to the householder to know that at least one Christmas staple this year is to be cheaper than last. One of the most important items always at Christmas is turkey, which is selling this year at 20 cents, compared with 22 for last year. There may be a variance in this price of a cent or two either way, probably upward, but 20 cents will be about the average.

Dressed chickens and ducks, and geese are bringing a shilling a pound at most places, but chickens have been quoted as low as 10 cents.

With perhaps one exception fruits, vegetables and meats are about the same as they were last year. The one exception is apples, which are bringing from 40 to 60 cents a peck, according to variety. An almost total failure of the apple crop throughout the entire west is accountable for this exceptionally high price.

For the epicurean, the retail fruit dealers have an array of excellent fruit at prices that average with this time of year. Green grapes, the imported Spanish variety, are selling at the same price, 20 cents a pound, that they were during the year. An excellent quality of California grapes can be had for 15 cents the pound. Grape fruit can be had from 10 cents each to two for a quarter. Oranges are bringing during the year 40 cents a dozen, and the quality was never better, and unusually good for this season of the year.

There is a certain quantity of hot house vegetables in the market, for which there is always a large demand at Christmas time. The prices, considering the season, are not unreasonable. Radishes may be had for from 8 to 10 cents a bunch; head lettuce for 12 to 15 cents the head, and cauliflower for 5 cents a bunch. A large demand for Christmas time, are cucumbers 15 cents each; tomatoes 25 cents a pound; and parsley 5 cents a bunch. Sweet potatoes, of an unusually excellent quality, can be had for 6 cents a pound, about a cent higher than a year ago. Mixed nuts run from 15 to 20 cents a pound.

FARMERS MARKET STOCK.

Only Fair Market at Chicago Greets Shippers of Live Cattle.

Farmers from Marshall and Hardin counties reached the city Friday from Chicago, where they had been to market different classes of stock. A market that was only fair, and from that to bad, greeted the shippers. "Jack" Wheeler and S. L. and L. E. Rash, of Union, and W. G. Ward, of Clemons, arrived Friday from the Chicago market. H. J. Benson, of Union, was also on the market, but did not return with the others. Mr. Ward secured the best prices, getting $4.70 for his steers, $4.40 for cows, and $4.55 for heifer stuff.

Mr. Welch sold one load of cattle, twenty head of steers averaging 1,225, at $4.25. He also marketed a load of sheep.

S. L. Rash disposed of two loads of steers, forty head, averaging 1,000 pounds, for even 4 cents. He sold a load of hogs at $4.57.

L. E. Rash's hogs, a large consignment of cattle, all heifer stuff, brought 3 cents. The animals averaged about 100 pounds.

H. J. Benson's shipment was three car load of sheep.

On the local market O. S. Chasman, of Bromley, marketed a load of mixed hogs for B. L. Pyle, of Marietta, and Fred Armbricht, of Clemons, sold a load for A. Reimenschneider, of State Center.

ANNUAL BANQUET IN JANUARY.

Yearly Meeting of the Railroad Y. M. C. A. to Be Held Soon.

The annual meeting of the members of the Railroad Y. M. C. A., which will include at the same time the annual supper for the members, is to be held at the association building some time early in January. At the meeting of the directors last night, a committee, composed of T. I. Wasson, C. J. Ewing, and John A. Goodell, was appointed to arrange the details and fix the date. At this meeting the annual reports of the association will be read.

The directors authorized a student's membership, for periods of six months intended for non-residents who are in the city attending school.

The executive committee, together with George Espersen, and L. H. Coryell was made a nominating committee to place in nomination the names of five men, to fill the vacancies on the board. These nominations will be made at the annual meeting of the association.

PLAN VACATION FOR BOYS.

Y. M. C. A. Arranges Sports for Its Younger Members.

The boys' department of the Railroad Y. M. C. A., under the leadership of Earl Roberts, has prepared a ten days' program of sports and entertainments for the smaller boys of the department, which begins next Monday and takes in every week day, excepting Christmas, until Friday, Jan. 6. The program includes a roller skat-

MAILING THE SUPPLEMENT.

If Mailed Without News Section of Newspaper 'the Rate is 6 Cents.'

After careful search of the departmental rulings Postmaster Smith has decided that the illustrated supplements if mailed separate from the news section of the Times-Republican will require third-class postage which is six cents for each copy. If the supplement is mailed with the news section of the paper, it will be considered as a regular newspaper and will require no extra charge to anyone wishing to secure the second class rate. By enclosing the complete newspaper with the illustrated supplement they will go second class at four cents per copy. The supplement alone weighs eleven ounces, which, at second class rate of one cent for four ounces would require only three cents, but the postmaster holds that the postal rules which require the complete edition to be enclosed to secure this rate, hence, there must be either four or six cents in postage affixed.

WACHTER'S CANDIES

The Home Made Candy Store Has Made Preparation for Your Christmas Sweets and You'll Do Well to Trade There.

Get your Christmas candies at Wachter's. Why? Because they are made from pure ingredients, are wholesome and will not harm the child's stomach. Wachter has the candies in fancy Christmas boxes ranging in price from 25 cents to $10 and can please you no matter what you want. Why not buy of Wachter? Home made candies are better. You know they are pure. Wachter's headquarters for Christmas candies.

Public Speaker Interrupted. Public speakers are frequently interrupted by people coughing. Local Comment. Today marks the winter solstice, with the shining directly over the Tropic of Cancer. For the next six months the days will continue to grow longer and the nights shorter. The old maxim, "as the days grow longer the cold grows stronger" can not help but prove true this winter.

The good feeling evidenced by the merchants of Marshalltown, as clearly shown in the T.R.'s resume of the holiday shoppers, is gratifying to all business interests. Last year the holiday sales in Marshalltown were record breaking. Business conditions today are not normal, and yet the merchants, smarting at a man, report their holiday sales as equal to last year at the same time, and in several instances they exceed a year ago. This is especially true with all dealers in staple lines, for people are buying in this year as they did in the year before. The idea that the child must have something that it doesn't really need on Christmas, to make the season appear different from other times, is not being adhered to as strictly as it once was.

It should be recognized that it is most remarkable to find Christmas trade at the stores this year fully up to last year's volume. Last year the crops in Marshall county broke the ten year record in abundance, prices were high and prosperity was at full tide. This year the reaction in business came thirty days ago, the mills are cutting down their forces, prices of grain and live stock have fallen, the banks have been compelled to limit withdrawals of currency and everybody feels cautious if not hard-up. The store which under these conditions, fully equal to previous records can congratulate itself. A community which will carry on its purchases regardless of financial straits, demonstrates that it has substance back of it. In fact it has often been remarked that a conservative community like Marshalltown would feel hard times the least of any city in the west and there is much of truth in the observation.

The united and joint effort of farmers and merchants should now be turned upon the success of the short course in agricultural science which has been planned. Don't let 100,000 tickets be sold among farmers who wished to attend. If Marshalltown could entertain 1,000 farmers and their wives for a week the increased yield per acre as the result of their studies and the intimate friendships cultivated will return bountiful harvests to all classes. Let's throw the doors of hospitality open to the farmers and encourage thousands to attend the short course of lectures in agricultural science.

A horse hitch has been at large in central Iowa now for a week and no trace of him seems possible. One would think that the frontier had moved back upon us about fifty years.

The plan of the Marshall county farmers' short course committee, to interest the school children of the county by providing a declamatory contest and spelling bee, is a admirable one. If more inducements were held out today in the public schools for the children to learn to spell properly, the pupils would be receiving a better education.

Millions of bottles of Foley's Honey and Tar have been sold without any persons ever having experienced any other than beneficial results from its use for coughs, colds and lung troubles. This is because the genuine Foley's Honey and Tar in the yellow package contains no opiates or other harmful drugs. Guard your health by refusing any but the genuine. McBride & Will Drug Co.

STOLEN HORSES ARE FOUND AT MT. VERNON

Animals Stolen Last Monday Night Are Abandoned in Farmers' Door Yard

BELIEVE THE THIEF IS INSANE

Sheriff Hutson is Convinced the Man Who Made Away With the Animals is Mentally Deranged—Drove Night and Day and Retraced His Steps—Go After Horses.

The two horses stolen Monday night by an unknown thief have been found, apparently abandoned by the person who stole them. Sheriff Hutson was notified by telephone this morning that the horses hitched to the buggy were discovered in a farmer's yard two miles west of Mount Vernon. Sheriff Hutson, accompanied by H. A. Smith, of Marion township, the owner of one of the horses, left for Mount Vernon this morning.

The report of the finding of the horses said that the thief had not appeared, at least he was not seen in the vicinity of where the horses were found. Sheriff Hutson believes, however, that he cannot be far away.

Sheriff Hutson only returned Friday night from scouring the country about Cedar Rapids. An automobile was used in this trip and much ground was covered, but, also a trail of the man was found, he was not caught.

The way this trail wound and twisted east of Cedar Rapids made the sheriff feel confident that the thief is insane. After leaving Cedar Rapids the trail followed three sides of a square, and then doubled back on the former track and led away toward Mount Vernon.

Sheriff Hutson believes the thief abandoned the horses when they became practically exhausted. It is known that for two days and two nights the team had been driven without a rest. They were completely worn out when found.

The second horse belongs to John Lowry, living just east of Marion township, in Tama county.

LEAGUE OPENS JAN. 1.

First Game of the Y. M. C. A. League to Be Played Then.

The Railroad Y. M. C. A. indoor base ball league will open on New Year's evening, and altho the schedule has not yet been arranged, this date has been fixed for the opening game. The Iowa Central is to be represented in the league, and a meeting of Central employees for this purpose is to be held at the association building this evening. A meeting of the representatives of the league is also to be held tonight to perfect plans for the organization.

HIS COURTSHIP

By HELEN R. MARTIN, Author of 'Tillie: A Mennonite Maid.'

COPYRIGHT, 1907, By McCLURE, PHILLIPS & COMPANY.

CHAPTER XVIII. KIROSS had time to become very restless while he waited that night in the haunted room before Euntie made her appearance. He was rather apprehensive lest the curiosity of some of the household about this room might lead to his being discovered there alone with the girl. For her sake he would greatly dislike the appearance of it.

He placed a chair for her, the only one in the room, and sat down himself on the foot of the bed.

He felt rather at a loss as to how he should deal with her. It was hard to have to disappoint the bright expectation of that pretty young face.

'Would it mean anything to you, Euntie,' he began, surprised at himself to note how his voice instinctively softened when he spoke to her as soon as would naturally modify one's tones in speaking to a timid, sensitive child, 'to be told you were born of very good blood?'

'Why should it not?' 'But in your isolation from the world can you possibly have learned the significance of such a fact?'

'It means, doesn't it, that my parents were people of gentle and noble minds?'

'Well,' he smiled, 'we do not always attach just that meaning to it. Some very degenerate families are proud of their good blood.'

'Meaning merely their inherited rank? Yes, I know,' she nodded. 'But the rank is but the guinea's stamp. A man's a man for a t'other.'

'I should like to know that there is no taint of dishonor in my blood.'

'You have the comforting knowledge. Your father was a New York lawyer of high standing and stainless reputation.'

Her face glowed at his words. 'I have a pride in it,' she answered him.

'You may well have. Now,' he went on, 'as to the great story about this room and its connection with you. I will tell you what it is.'

He told her then nearly all that he knew, withholding only her prospects of great wealth and the source of his knowledge of her. If she knew of the existence of the "confession" he had found she would have a right to see it. He did not wish her to see it until he had ascertained what the probability was that her aunt would recognize her claim.

Euntie heard him with breathless attention. But the break in the continuity of his story bewildered her. 'But how, then, did you come to learn what you say is unknown to all others—that this man and woman who brought me here were not my parents and that I am the daughter of a New York lawyer, from whom they stole me away from my home?'

'I can't tell you that tonight, Euntie, but I will tell you my knowledge. It is better that I do not—just yet. Trust me and have patience.'

She looked at him, the brightness of her face unclouded by his denial, but she did not reply.

'You do trust me?' 'Why should I not?' she asked, with naive surprise.

'In fact,' he responded, 'I don't know just why you should. You don't know anything about me, and I know everything about you, sprang from her, "and nothing."

'Now,' he protested, 'that sounds as subtle as though it came from Georgiana. What does it mean?'

'With my heart I know you. With my head I don't understand you at all.'

'You pay me the highest compliment if your unsullied heart teaches you an instinctive trust of me. With your head you don't understand me,' he questioned her curiously.

'I don't understand why, if you love Miss Eillery, you should go out of your way to avoid her, even disguising yourself and feigning uncouthness.'

Her simplicity afforded him the liveliest entertainment.

'So that has been bothering you, has it? Well, you see, I came here to be quiet, and Miss Eillery isn't just to say, a restful person.'

She looked unlightened. 'But you love people who are not restful?'

'I don't always love to be with them.'

'Am I restful?'

She asked it with her look and tone of wishfulness which he was learning to watch for in talking to her.

'If I told you you were, what inference would you draw? You are such an alarmingly logical little person one has to be wary or be trapped into all sorts of admissions one wouldn't dream of making.'

'Is it a commendation to be told you are restful? I would suppose that people who count for something in our lives do not rest us. They stir us.'

She spoke with evident thinking. Surely, surely she was not making of Abel He would not believe it.

'And we like to be stirred, don't we?' he acquiesced. 'That's what we live for—to experience moments or—ours of thrilling sensations.'

Evidently he wouldn't let her by his references to Abe. He did not understand it. However, he would avoid that subject, too, hereafter.

He told her then what he had not mentioned before to any of the family—that he held the chair of psychology in the college of the nearby city, and he explained to her that by virtue of his profession he could the better "examine" her.

When he spoke of himself she listened with an interest that brought back to her face some of the brightness which had momentarily left it.

The examination which followed proved to be the first in his experience in which he found enjoyment. It was not quite the conventional examination. It soon degenerated into a form, at least, of a talk about books, though Kiross' mental attitude the while continued to be that of a schoolmaster examining a pupil. He had never before found any pupil quite so interesting. Her quaint talk revealed to him how much more real to her were the dream creatures of her books than were the people of her actual world.

It seems so strange, so unreal, to me that I should be speaking out like this of my secret thoughts of things," she said, a light of wonder in her eyes when he had led her on to talk of the tragic mating of Lydgate with Rosamond in "Middlemarch"; of the irony of fate in the gifted doctor's so narrowly missing his true mate, the high minded Dorothea; of the horror it must have been to the mother heart of Mrs. Coppelstone to die and leave David to the mercy of that dreadful stepfather; of the deep significance of that cry wrung from Guido in the hour of his extremity, in which when all other sources of help are closed to him he calls upon Pompilia for mercy, confessing in that cry what only his fear of the gallows could extort from him—his faith that when all others failed him she whom he had traduced before all Rome would surely come to his aid, in dedication of purpose or failure to respond to the vital call of nature through cowardice or other weakness, as in "The Statue and the Bust." He was astonished to find how keenly she felt and saw much which he would have deemed impossible to one of such limited experiences. Untrammelled by the world's conventions in forming her opinions or in taking impressions of things, there were a freedom and a breadth in her way of looking at life (the life of her world, peopled by characters out of books) and a candor in her speech that were refreshing, to say the least. Her own delight in speaking for the first time with one who could understand her "secret life," as she called it, was evident in her beaming countenance.

There was an excitement to him, too, in his communion. For the first time in his experience he was talking to a woman with a spontaneity, a naturalness, that seemed to open up the flood-gates of his soul.

He had never before met any woman who seemed to him to combine such evident ardor of temperament with such finesse. Surely here was a unique individuality, he thought, with a thrill of happy anticipation, the long hunger of his unsatisfied manhood leaning to meet the vague yearning for life which he read in her strangely expressive eyes, with their passionate fire.

He was warned at length by the sputtering of the wick in his lamp how the hours had flown.

'It is goodly as well as good night,' he said as he rose and held out his hand to her. "I am going away to-morrow."

The sudden blankness of her face almost alarmed him. She looked white, and she seemed unable to speak.

'But I shall be back within a week,' he hastened to reassure her. "And I shall be able to tell you everything then, I hope. Did you think I meant I was going to break my promise to you?'

'Going away?' she repeated dully, ignoring his question. "You are going away?'

'Believe me,' he begged her, "that I shall keep my promise to you. You shall know all that I know within a week."

'I do believe it. It is not that. It is—that you are going away.'

He was puzzled. "It will be dull for you, you mean, after the excitement of our talks in this room."

She drew a long breath, and her eyes fell from their intent gaze into his.

'I mean—since you came here the world has seemed full of light. When you go no doubt it will return to its original color.'

'What color is that?' he asked, smiling.

'A pale drab.'

He did not for an instant give a sentimental interpretation to her words. "Perhaps it will be well for your eyes to have a week's rest from the lurid light of my presence, for I hope to bring back news to you that will dazzle you sure enough unless I am greatly disappointed."

'News that will dazzle me? You mean that you are going to try to secure me a teacher's position?' she asked, with humble gratefulness.

'You would call that dazzling news, Euntie, if I came back with a position for you at teaching school? Well, well, everything depends upon one's point of view, of course. There are some young women to whom that would appear a "pale drab." I shouldn't wish it to my nearest enemy.'

'Then that isn't what you meant?'

'You will be disappointed if I say no?'

'I am ready to be examined.'

"I am in such suspense about my future. I am quite determined to leave here and it would be a relief to me to have something definite in view."

"You may feel entirely at peace about that, Euntie. I promise you I'll take care of it for you."

"You are sure you can find me a place and that I am not imposing on your kindness to ask it of you?'

"If I take a day off and roll up my sleeves to it I may be able to accomplish it—don't give it a moment's anxiety."

The contrast between the prosaic lot of a teacher to which she looked as a good almost too great to be hoped for and the brilliant fate he knew to be possibly hers struck him dramatically.

All the while he had been talking to her tonight he had been trying to catch sight of that index to her identity given in the "confession"—the two little moles under her left ear. He had not been able to see them, and the fear began to trouble him that they were not there to be seen. He now decided that he could not go on his errand to her aunt without this proof to add to all his other evidence he knew to be put his question with a directness that startled her.

'Parlor my inquisitiveness, but do you have two small moles on your neck under your left ear?'

His inquiry seemed to her irrelevant to the point of madness.

'What has that to do with it?'

'To do with what?'

'With anything. I mean what do you want to know for?'

'To be able to identify you as the daughter of your father. Please tell me.'

'Yes, I have.'

'May I see them?'

She turned her head and he saw the small dark spots on her white neck.

'Thank you. If you had the least idea what those two spots may mean to you, little girl—now, if I don't go away at once I shall be tempted to tell you the whole thing. It will be an infinitely better story, I confidently believe, if I keep it until my return.'

He clasped her hand, which rested cold in his own. Then he left her for a few hours' sleep before his departure in the early morning.
