According to the press committee of the Marshalltown Trades and Labor Assembly the committee asked the company to grant the increase in wages and place all the striking operators back to work; also that all home girls be given preference in the positions, which would mean the removal of those girls from out of the city now employed in the strikers' places. The committee said the company refused to meet the request.

AMUSEMENTS.

"The Girl Question," a Comedy With Music, Pleases Big Audiences.

"The Girl Question," a comedy in three acts, with a dozen musical numbers scattered thru them, greatly pleased a big Sunday-night audience at the Odeon. The company that presented the comedy, was in most respects, better than the one that appeared here in the piece last season.

"The Girl Question," which is by Adams, Hough and Howard, is a very clever comedy, and much of the music is bright and tuneful. Willie Dunlap had the leading male part of Con Ryan, the head waiter. May Sullivan was cast as Elsie Davis, the cashier, and Lillian Logan took the part of Joe Forster, a waitress. These were the two leading feminine parts. The comedy was very prettily costumed and staged.

The Little Homestead.

SIGHT COMES BACK.

Stenographer Recovers Her Lost Sense As Suddenly As It Left Her.

Minneapolis, Feb. 14.—Totally blind for almost three weeks as the result of a nervous shock, sight returned to Miss Christine Canfield, 502 Tenth street S. In her own words, the optic nerve that suddenly switched off as suddenly switched on again.

Miss Canfield's oculist says he is not at all surprised; it is what he has been expecting for several days. Miss Canfield's blindness, he says, was the result of tired nerves. It was expected to disappear as soon as she was sufficiently rested.

For more than two weeks the young woman has been in "total darkness."

Lying before an open window, she could not tell which way the light was. "It was just like being in a room at midnight with all the lights turned off," she says.

When Miss Canfield awoke early recently, to her surprise and delight she found she could see the light. That is, she could tell it was daytime. She cried the news to her mother, and all the other boarders in the house came running to congratulate her. They were distressed, tho, because she could see only dimly.

"Don't fret," said Miss Canfield. "It's getting better every minute."

It was, by 9 a. m. the once-blind girl could recognize her friends. By noon she was looking out of the window and seeing objects at a distance and by afternoon she began to read print. The recovery was complete.

Miss Canfield is employed in the office of the L. Davis Investment Company, 524 Boston block. Nearly three weeks ago, the sudden closing of a typewriter desk produced a nervous shock and when she opened her eyes after the crash she found herself attacked by blindness.

CURES ALL PNEUMONIA.

Experimenter Declares New Method Successful in Worst Kind of Cases.

New York, Feb. 14.—Six cases of pneumonia, ordinarily fatal, were cured by means of inoculation with a vaccine of killed pneumococci, it is announced by Dr. Henry A. Craig. He is assistant physician at the Sailors' Snug Harbor hospital, New Brighton, Staten Island. He tells of the cure in the current issue of the Medical Record.

In these cases the ages of the patients were from 66 to 87 years, and, as is well known, pneumonia is fatal to almost all patients of that age. What is, perhaps, more important is that all the patients had a marked alcoholic history and all showed marked arteriosclerosis, he says.

Millions of the germs, obtained from the blood when possible and from the sputum, are made into a vaccine, the number of the pneumococci being 50,000,000 in a cubic centimeter. They are killed by keeping them in a hot-air sterilizer for three-quarters of an hour at a temperature of from 65 to 60 degrees centigrade.

The vaccine is then ready for use, and the patient is usually vaccinated with from 20,000,000 to 30,000,000 of the bacteria at one time. The treatment is repeated every two days until the patient is on the road to recovery.

Dr. Craig said that he had now used the treatment in seven cases—one case since the article was written—and that there had been a recovery in every case. Before the present method of treatment the mortality from pneumonia was 66 2-3 per cent.

The White House Mail.

The average daily mail received at the White House is, of course, very large. The president can not, it follows, read these letters as an ordinary business man reads his morning mail, but by a carefully developed system their contents are in substance presented to him.

A corps of confidential clerks open the letters and give them a first reading. They are then carefully sorted. Many of them do not need to go to the president, as they are simply recommendations for office. These, after being courteously acknowledged, are referred to the proper departments, and placed on file there until the subject to which each of them relates can be taken up for consideration.

Many of the letters are purely formal, or contain requests for something which can not be granted. These the clerks answer and the president's secretary signs. The requests for charity are so many that a special "form" has been devised to be used in answering them. They are all like necessarily and politely refused.

All letters which the president ought to see are carefully briefed—that is, a slip is pinned at the top of each letter, and on this is a typewritten synopsis of its contents, telling who the writer is and what he has to present. Frequently the president is sufficiently interested by the brief to cause him to read the whole letter. Sometimes the communication is referred to a cabinet officer, in which case the slip is retained at the White House and filed away.

When a large number of persons write on the same subject the letters are bunched, and the briefs at the top give the names of those who present one argument, and in another list the persons who offer a different view. This is an admirable way of "jumping at conclusions," made necessary by the excessive burdens of the presidential office.—Harper's Weekly.

Rumors Concerning Leprosy In Hair Goods

During the past few weeks there has been brought to the attention of the public many rumors concerning women who have contracted leprosy from hair goods. The hair goods business has grown into astonishing proportions, this demand has spread the search for hair goods to all parts of the world—thus giving a sort of basis for these rumors.

The Dry Goods Reporter and the Health Department of Chicago have been searching for facts of these cases and find there is not a vestige of truth in them, as you will see by the following:

$500 Reward! The Dry Goods Reporter will pay $500 to any person who submits conclusive evidence that any man, woman or child in the United States has ever contracted leprosy by wearing or handling domestic or imported artificial hair or hair goods of any form. The evidence will have to name the person who has the disease and designate when and where leprosy was contracted.
