ROOSEVELT MUM ON POLITICS.

Met by Correspondents, He Refuses to Discuss Public Affairs.

On the Upper White Nile, via Renk March 11.—Here on the edge of the jungle a party of correspondents met Col. Theodore Roosevelt returning from a year's hunt in the African wilds and appearing fit, hard, and strong.

The colonel and his party were passengers on the Sudan government steamer Dal, which presented a picturesque appearance, driven by a huge stern wheel and towing a barge filled with rare faunal specimens shot and collected since the last shipment to Washington.

Colonel Roosevelt was absolutely silent on public questions, making only the following statement for publication:

"We have nothing to say and will have nothing to say on American or foreign political questions or any phase ing that," the wife answered, "but what I would do wouldn't interest a man."

She said this in a tone of voice that ought to have warned the husband, but he felt like tempting fate that evening and he did.

"It would interest me," he assured her, placing emphasis on the last word. "If you really want to know, I'll tell you," the wife answered. "The first thing I would do would be to get the children some respectable shoes. They have been wearing the ones they have on since season before last. Then I would have a new gown made to replace the one I made over from my wedding dress, fourteen years ago. Then I'd buy enough new dishes to set the table decently. After that I'd pitch out all the old rattletap furniture in the house and—"

But the husband suddenly remembered that he had forgotten to spill the kindling.
