INDIANS DEFEY AGENT

SERIOUS INSURRECTION PREVAILS ON RESERVATION IN TAMA COUNTY.

REDS DEFEY OFFICERS WITH HATCHETS AND CLUBS

Right of Agent to Serve Warrants for Arrests Disputed and Ignored—Open Rebellion and Hostilities Narrowly Averted in Effort to Serve Warrant on Sam Peters and Others.

Special to Times-Republican.

Toledo, May 4.—There is trouble on the Musquakie Indian reservation near here, and the reds are openly defying the authority of the agent to exercise police powers over the reservation. The Indians are in a mood to make trouble and in a recent effort to arrest Sam Peters a personal clash with the government authorities was narrowly averted, the reds assembling with weapons, including hatchets and clubs, and compelling the police to abandon their efforts to secure the custody of Peters.

This has been advised by outsiders. It is the fifth time the Indians have refused to accept the service of a warrant for arrest, and the squaws are ready to fight with their husbands and sons for what they claim are their rights. Apparently the Indians have been advised by some one that the agent has no authority to issue warrants and that such warrants can be resisted even to the extreme of violence. Up to the present the reds have been the best of the situation, and the agent is awaiting developments.

Drink Cause of Troubles. Sales of liquors to the reds and the efforts of the federal officers and agent to stop sales by arresting those who bring liquors to the reservation and those who become intoxicated therefrom have led up to the present trouble and the complete defiance of the agent's regularly appointed policemen.

Agent Green Issues Statement. O. J. Green, superintendent and agent of the Sac and Fox Indians in Iowa, makes the following statement concerning the troubles and relates the details of exciting encounters of his officers in their efforts to place in jail those charged with violations of the laws:

"The annuity payment was made to these Indians last fall on Sept. 15, a few days afterwards they secured a supply of whisky from some source, and went on a big drunk. On the 18th warrants were issued by the Indian agent for the arrest of Sam Peters, John Buffalo, and any other Indians who might be found intoxicated.

"Sam Peters, John Buffalo, George Ward, Jimmie Ward, and Bill Wanatee were secured. They were all given a careful hearing at the little jail on the reservation, and every one admitted that they were drunk, but told different stories as to where they secured the liquor. They were each sentenced to thirty days in the little jail in harmony with the regulations of the Indian office.

"Sam Peters, John Buffalo, and Jimmie Ward broke jail and left for the south, going to their friends and relatives in Kansas and Oklahoma. After a few weeks Jimmie Ward returned and was picked up and served out his term. The Indian agent was authorized to come to Washington about the 21st of the month, but before going wrote Mr. Van Wert, who was then at Sioux City to come down and mix in this mess. Mr. Van Wert being a special officer was authorized to investigate the such matter.

"Mr. Van Wert arrived after the agent had left but went to work at once to locate if possible the source of supply. Some of the Indians said that the liquor was brought from Marshalltown. So he, with one of his deputies and accompanied by W. A. Talbert, the Indian farmer, and Rev. R. G. Smith, the missionary, went to Marshalltown to look up the matter. Several saloonkeepers and bootleggers had, previous to this time, had their lessons in Marshalltown, but still there seemed to be a leak some place.

"He believes that the mayor and police did to these gentlemen has already been pretty well advertised, and is to receive further notice at the May term of federal court at Des Moines. It was learned that Frank Earl, the same Indian who had been tried a few years ago in the federal court at Cedar Rapids for the murder of an Indian policeman on this reservation, had been instrumental in bringing two jugs of whisky to the reservation. In the meantime he had fled to Oklahoma. He was secured by the federal authorities, taken back, and pleaded guilty at the April term of court, and will have six months to think it over. Charges against other Indians are being investigated.

Peters Comes Back. "April 19 word was received that Sam Peters had returned to the reservation. This was reported to the agent by the Indian farmer. He was directed to see that Sam was secured and placed in jail to serve out the balance of his sentence the same as Jimmie Ward had been obliged to do.

"Wednesday, the 20th, James Poweshiek, the Indian policeman, went to Sam's home to get him. He lives with his father, Jim Peters. He refused to go with the policeman, and as there were several Indians ready to help him, it seemed best not to force the matter, thinking that he would come to his senses and come without making trouble. His claim seems to be that in his opinion, and that of his advisers, the Indian agent has no authority to authorize the arrest of any Indian.

"He wanted to see a 'real warrant' issued by a federal officer, saying that he would not go for one of those type-written papers made by the agent. "Friday afternoon, the 22d, Joe Teason, Jr., another of the Indian policeman, met him in the road not far from the little jail. He was alone and so was the policeman. He said he would not go unless the policeman could drag him to the jail. The policeman thought it was asking too much of him to make a patrol wagon of himself. So the matter was again passed on to Friday. "The next day the Indian farmer, who had again been reinforced with typewritten authority, warrant, etc., took an interest in the matter. Special Officer Van Wert, who happened to be in this locality, went along to assist as might be necessary. It was learned from some of the Indians that Sam had that morning gone to center, near his father, Jim Peters.

Another Attempt Fails. "Upon arriving in Montour with the two Indian police they shortly came across Jim Peters. At first he stated that Sam was not in town, but that he had left home the day before and had not been seen since. After a little while Jim came around and met the officers again and told them that if they wanted to see Sam they might find him at the house mentioned, but they were not admitted, reporting upon their return that they were sure someone was in the house having heard or seen them, but that their knock was not answered. Finally Officer Van Wert went to the house mentioned. He also knocked for admittance but found the door locked. After further search about town the matter was dropped again for the present. So the other night a scheme to get the officers into some act of indiscretion, both failed for the time being. Jim again made quite a long speech about the particular kind of warrant which would be necessary in order to secure the arrest of his son, Sam.

Sam Puts Up a Fight. "The following Monday evening Mr. Talbert and the two police arrested Sam as he was on his way home from an Indian dance. He put up a good fight for some time, the boys who were with him standing by to assist. He was finally secured about the door, and a pair of handcuffs placed on him. As they were about to start with him for the jail, he still refusing and being determined that he would not go unless he was taken all the way by force, all at once after he had seemingly made up his mind to be decent about the deal, he secured a slight advantage and broke away, ran down the hill, thru the two railroad wire fences, waded the hydraulic canal, and escaped to the thick brush on the other side. The officers were after him, ordering him to halt, firing a couple of shots to enforce their demands. The other Indians who had been left behind in the chase began to shout not to kill him, making threats that they would do if another shot was fired. The officers kept their heads were careful or quite a muss might have been stirred up. The search was dropped as the officers were unable to find Sam in the brush.

Agent Green Defies Officers. "Saturday, the 29th, Special Officer Van Wert was again in this locality and it was decided to again attempt to arrest Sam. Mr. Jewett of Tama took Mr. Van Wert to the reservation in his auto. They stopped and took along Mr. Talbert. Arriving at Jim Peters' house they waited for the arrival of Jim who was not far away before entering the shack. Jim said that Sam was not there, but upon opening the door he was found to be inside. He was ordered to put on his coat and come along. He insisted that he must first see his particular kind of a warrant. Other Indians began to drop in. The officers wished to avoid trouble if possible and did their best to urge Sam to come along without resistance. He utterly and flatly refused to go except on his own conditions, which are impossible to fulfill, and defied the officers by taunting them and telling them to shoot him. His father, Jim, also especially requested several times to be shot. The officers, however, tried to show the Indians that they did not want any trouble, all they wanted was for Sam to go along with them, assuring him as he already knew that he would be fairly and properly treated; but that continuing resistance on his part would eventually lead to serious trouble.

In Battle Array. "Finally the Indian farmer went over to the mission and phoned to the agent for further instructions, and was advised to get Sam if possible. Rev. R. G. Smith who is in the employ of the government, returned with Mr. Talbert. Before their return to Peters' house he had driven away with his team, and brought back several of his friends with him. Several others came in another rig until there were about twenty women and children. Sam was urged to come along. The Indians, both men and women, secured hatchets, sticks and pieces of pipe and stood ready to have a scrap, some of them taunting the officers to shoot.

"Mr. Jewett urged Sam to go along without any trouble, and then fight the matter in the courts if he did not think it was properly done, offering to put up all the money necessary for him to make the fight with, but to no avail. "Their actions in this matter seem to indicate the fact that they believe themselves to be in the wrong, for our as the courts are competent for our part we invite a test of these matters in the proper courts, for we believe we have full right and power to enforce peace and decency on the reservation, and right to use whatever force may be necessary to this end.

Contentions of the Reds. "The Indians claim that they are advised that the agent has no authority to issue a warrant or cause the arrest of an Indian no matter what he may do; that an Indian can not be punished by any person at any time for the violation of any state law; that the Indian can only be arrested when a regular warrant is made by a civil magistrate or commissioner is properly served on them, and that such a warrant can only be issued for them for seven crimes; they contend further that except for the seven crimes they can not be brought to account for anything they may do no matter what it is, and no matter what law or court or government or force attempts to bring them to an account. "We believe law, the decisions of the courts, even up to the supreme court of the United States, and special acts of the congress of the United States, all authorize the Indian agent to exercise police power and authority in the Indian country for such minor offenses as do not come under the regular statutes. "Within the jurisdiction of the Indian agent and in harmony with his instructions, the warrants issued by him, and the police authority exercised under his direction, are just as legal and enforceable as those of any officer or court which exists, and continued resistance to such writs may lead to just as serious consequences.

Agent Claims Authority. "The Indian agent has no authority to issue a warrant or proceed to the arrest of any person who has violated some special statute of the state or federal government except by due process of law. The agent has no authority to issue a warrant or proceed to the arrest of any person who has violated some special statute of the state or federal government except by due process of law. "Fagin" to Seek Other Fields. "St. Louis, Mo., May 4.—The case against Sam Peters was arrested Sunday evening on the temporary charge of vagrancy, and held pending an investigation into the truth of the stories related by Fay Dunkelberger and Oscar Pohl, two small boys who claim Smith taught them how to cheat and graft the public did not come to a head in police court yesterday. The prisoner and his wife agreed to leave town by this evening and their offer was accepted by the authorities.

Albrook that he will be a candidate for district judge again, is received with much satisfaction in this part of the judicial district, where Mr. Albrook has made an excellent record. With the bar of the district as well with the people in general his record has found approval and endorsement.

white persons. These matters have been quite thoroughly tested in the courts, almost without exception they have been decided in favor of the government.

"Now no one can but commend these officers for the careful course they pursued in this matter. This, the fifth attempt, to secure Sam Peters, is a record for the present in order that the Indians may get some advice if possible which will bring them to their senses. There is no possible way to meet their unreasonable requests even if it seemed best to do so. It is simply a determined stand against the authority of the Indian agent to exercise police power and authority on the reservation."

Glenwood, May 4.—J. W. Murphy, one of the best known horticulturists in Iowa does not share the belief that any considerable percentage of the fruit crop in Mills county has been saved. He estimates that there will be not more than 2 per cent of a crop in southwest Iowa. He said today: "I have been asked personally and by mail many times in the past few days about the condition of the apple crop of this locality and will say that for a few days after the freeze it looked like we would have some apples left on the south side of the trees, as they hung on and looked quite well for several days, but the continued dry and hot weather with the hard winds that prevailed were more than they could stand, and now at this time it looks like we would not have 2 per cent of a crop in southwest Iowa, cherries, plums, peaches and pears included."

STARTLING FACTS DISCLOSED. Tuberculosis Exact Toll of One Every Thirteen Days at Keokuk. "Keokuk, May 4.—Tuberculosis, the foe which medical men of Iowa are now fighting with all their might, exacts as its toll from Keokuk homes one person every thirteen days. This was disclosed at the regular meeting of the Keokuk Medical Society. One of the doctors read a paper showing that in Keokuk during the past twenty years there had been deaths numbering 537 from this single disease. That many homes have been infected, causing family after family to have one or more of its members fall as victims was shown specifically by a large map of the city, which had been dotted in blue ink showing exactly what homes have been touched. The local medical society is launching a great movement for the purpose of successfully combating tuberculosis. At the meeting a committee composed of three leading doctors was appointed for the purpose of devising the best means of conducting this campaign. The matter will be taken up with the local board of health. The state is doing a great work in the warfare against tuberculosis but the local society does not believe that the state should assume the responsibility of having to care for Keokuk's citizens, but that the work should be taken up here immediately.

STARTLING FACTS DISCLOSED. Tuberculosis Exact Toll of One Every Thirteen Days at Keokuk. "Keokuk, May 4.—Tuberculosis, the foe which medical men of Iowa are now fighting with all their might, exacts as its toll from Keokuk homes one person every thirteen days. This was disclosed at the regular meeting of the Keokuk Medical Society. One of the doctors read a paper showing that in Keokuk during the past twenty years there had been deaths numbering 537 from this single disease. That many homes have been infected, causing family after family to have one or more of its members fall as victims was shown specifically by a large map of the city, which had been dotted in blue ink showing exactly what homes have been touched. The local medical society is launching a great movement for the purpose of successfully combating tuberculosis. At the meeting a committee composed of three leading doctors was appointed for the purpose of devising the best means of conducting this campaign. The matter will be taken up with the local board of health. The state is doing a great work in the warfare against tuberculosis but the local society does not believe that the state should assume the responsibility of having to care for Keokuk's citizens, but that the work should be taken up here immediately.
