CHAPTER XI

WHEN Harold Du Val left college with the determination of earning money to pay his gambling debts it was with a very hazy idea of how he was going to do it. Of one thing he was determined—he would go far away that there would be little danger of his being known. It was still without a definite purpose that he boarded a train and started west. At Salt Lake City he stopped and spent several days looking for work only to find that every position had half a dozen men waiting for it.

At last in discouragement he took the train again, this time not stopping until he reached Seattle. Here his search for work was of little more avail than at Salt Lake City. One day when both his money and his hopes had almost reached their lowest ebb he wandered down to the wharf and stood idly watching a sealer making ready to sail.

He was suddenly startled by a heavy hand on his shoulder and turned quickly around to be confronted by a rough looking, bearded seaman. The sailor looked Harold over critically for a moment without speaking, nodding approvingly as he noted the well built, athletic form.

"Do you want to ship with us?" he asked at last.

Harold looked from his rough questioner to the dirty little ship and shuddered. A winter in the arctic circle with a crew of quarreling sailors for companions was not exactly what he had had in mind when he started west to earn that $800. Then he remembered Mabel's last words, "I know you can do it, Harold," and the disappointed look in Gladys's eyes the time she said, "The kind of boys I like are those who can do things." He turned and looked the shipmaster squarely in the eyes.

"I'll go," he said. "How much?" "A hundred dollars a month and your share of one-fourth of the net profits. Be ready in half an hour."

The history of that sealing trip would make a story in itself. There were times when Harold almost wished that he could loose his hold of the greasy rail and drop into the water, where he could rest. The days were a confused jumble of nerve racking toil and the nights a brief moment of oblivious slumber. The hardest training on the football field had been played compared to this. But Harold was blessed with a strong constitution, and before they had been out a month he could hold up his end of the work with any man on board. It was a hard trip for a boy who had never worked before, but it did much to make a man of him, and he came back a greatly changed Harold.

It was summer again, and Mabel was sitting on a low hanging branch of one of the apple trees reading one afternoon when she was startled by a merry hello from the ground below and, glancing down, saw Harold looking up at her.

The eight months he had been away had made a great change in him. His mouth was firmer, there was a strong-ing!" he cried. "Go back there after what I've done? I can't, Mabel."

"It's the only way," she said.

Harold buried his face in his hands. After a long time he straightened up. "I used to think all life was for me to have fun," he said. "And I guess I had my share. But it seems that every one has to have his share of hard knocks, too, and it seems to be my turn now."

He hesitated a moment longer and then slid to the ground. "Goodby," he said. "I'm going back to school." And he hurried away.

Almost another year had passed, and all nature was bursting into bloom at the magic touch of spring. Gladys was sitting at the study table in their little room on the top floor of the girls' dormitory trying hard not to get the notes of the robin outside her window mixed up with her troublesome French verbs when Mabel brought her a letter.

She gave a little cry of dismay as she read it. It was from her father. Her mother was sick, he said. He disliked to ask them to break in on their school work, but could one of them come home for a few days? It wouldn't be at all necessary for them both to come.

Gladys threw down the letter and fished her suit case out of the closet.

"Where are you going?" asked Mabel in surprise.

"Home," replied Gladys laconically, pointing toward the letter.

"I'm going, too," announced Mabel after she had read it.

It was only by dint of much argument Gladys finally persuaded her to stay, and then only after she had promised to telegraph at once if there was any danger.

It seemed to Gladys that it was weeks before the train reached the little town that she called home. Her father laid a warning finger on his lips as she entered the door.

"Hush!" he said. "She's asleep!"

Never. "Newspapers are full of inconsistencies."

"No doubt. Still, you never see a millinery advertisement on the sporting page.—Birmingham Age-Herald."

No insult. He—I never look at you without thinking of a managerie.

She—Sirl!

He—Yes, your dear face and tapering fingers, you know.

er curve to his chin, and his eyes had taken on a resolute, self reliant look in place of their old shiftness.

"May I come up?" he asked, and without waiting for an answer he swung himself up to a seat beside her. "You don't need to tell me you've succeeded," said Mabel. "I can see that for myself."

"Yes," he cried enthusiastically. "I've paid off those old gambling debts to the last cent. I guess that squares me now."

Mabel looked at him. "Does it?" she asked meaningly.

"Why?" he inquired in a surprised tone. "I've paid every cent I owe the fellows. Doesn't that make it all right?"

"What about the stain you left on your fraternity, on the football team and on the reputation of the school for being fair in athletics?"

He winced. "That's all past now," he said lamely. "Money can't pay that."

"No, that's true," she replied. "And so you are going to let it go and say everything is square?"

"What else do you want me to do?" he said helplessly. "I can't undo the past. I only wish I could."

"I want you to go back to college," said Mabel earnestly. "Clean up the fraternities and clean up athletics, especially the gambling part of it. I know you can do it, and it's the only way to make things square."

"You don't realize what you're ask-

FIND DINOSAUR BONES

Report of Marvelous Achievements of Expedition of Scientists.

Omaha, May 27.—Bones of the ancient dinosaur, the once-existent terror of the American animal Kingdom, have been found in plenty in Wyoming. It was announced today by scientists of this city who were members of the famous expedition into the sedimentary hills of Wyoming.

Results of the findings were kept a strict secret by the members of the expedition, until the official announcement came to hand today in a handsome little book containing the fascinating story of the recent expedition along with photographs of a large number of bones and a photographic reproduction of a life-like dinosaur, which was put together from the bones secured. The photograph is a part of the book announcement of the scientists.

In the preface of the book Curator W. H. Reed, of the University of Wyoming, who acted in the capacity of chief guide for the expedition, says: "The first fossil expedition into Wyoming was conducted in 1870. In 1888 a former successful trip was undertaken, which was rich today and to me, after forty years' experience in the work, it seems the field is just as good as if it never had been touched. No party that makes a thorough investigation in our summer ever goes away empty-handed, usually some rich and rare fossils are found. There is no square on the earth as rich as Wyoming in its fossil forms of ancient life."

The book, which is because of its scientific fascination, one of the most interesting volumes ever written on western wonders, will not be placed on sale generally, it is announced, but E. L. Lomax, G. P. A. Union Pacific railroad, Omaha, Neb., thru the courtesy of which the expedition was made possible, has received the first edition of 100 copies from the press and will send a copy free to all who will write him before the edition is exhausted.

Hampton's Memorial Program.

Special to Times-Republican. Hampton, May 27.—Memorial Day will be observed in this city Monday, May 30, in a way very similar to that which has prevailed for several years past.

Members of the G. A. R., W. R. C., Sons of Veterans, and other veterans will meet at Memorial hall and form in procession for the march to the cemetery. As the procession passes the east side schoolhouse the details of school children, sixty-two in number, are expected to be ready to take their places in line for the balance of the march.

Exercises will be held at the monument of the unknown dead, after which the various details will be conducted by a veteran to the graves assigned them for decoration. This done the school children will be dismissed. After a short ritualistic service the return march will be made to Memorial hall, where all will disband for dinner.

At 2 p. m., the Grand Army post and Relief Corps will lead the procession to the court room, where the exercises will be held.

Finds Mother He Never Saw.

Waterloo, May 27.—To be separated from one's mother since a mere babe, to be adopted into a family and think one was a child of the adopted parents, and then to have the real condition of affairs dawn upon him, is the unusual experience of John J. Lutter, aged 22.

At 2 p. m., the Grand Army post and Relief Corps will lead the procession to the court room, where the exercises will be held.

Mr. Lutter was separated from his mother when 6 months old, being adopted into an orphan's home at Des Moines. Later he was adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Lutter at Creston. His brothers and sisters were located elsewhere.

In the afternoon the young man seeking his relatives, many of whom he has never seen, went to call on his aunts. Later he visited his mother, Mrs. Herman Lutter, living at 240 Douglas street.

One brother is Sam Wolf, living at Keota, and Clifford Gross, living at Montezuma. Another sister, Isabel Dunn, lives at Greeley, Col.

Taft Will Make Speedy Trip.

Scheduled to Speak in Four Cities June 2, 3 and 4.

Washington, May 27.—As speedy a speech-making trip as President Taft has yet made is scheduled for June 2-5, and arrangements for the journey were completed yesterday.

Ada, Ohio, and Detroit, Monroe, and Jackson, Mich., will be visited on the two days. On his way west the president will stop at Bryn Mawr to attend the commencement exercises.

The president will leave Washington June 2, visiting Bryn Mawr that day. June 3 he will attend the commencement of the Ohio Northern University at Ada, O., where he will deliver the class address. The same evening he will be rushed to Detroit to speak at a banquet of the Detroit board of commerce.

On June 4 the president will leave Detroit for Monroe, Mich., where he will unveil a statue of General Custer. That afternoon he will attend the semi-centennial celebration of the birth of the republican party at Jackson, Mich., remaining in Jackson until evening.

The president will reach Washington the evening of June 5.

Astronomer Never Saw Stars.

Dr. Max Wolf of Heidelberg, to whom astronomy owes the discovery, by the aid of photography, of 36 new asteroids, has himself never seen a single one of these little planets. He has only looked upon the images of the stars discovered by him, leaving to other "searchers of the sky" the pleasure of viewing them through telescopes.

Two Evils.

"It must be awful to be caught with the goods on you," "It's worse to be caught with the goods off you. I forgot three of my wife's errands yesterday."

STOMACH LIVER LUNGS

Each of the chief organs of the body is a link in the Chain of Life. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, the body is no stronger than its weakest organ. If there is weakness of stomach, liver or lungs, there is a weak link in the chain of life which may snap at any time. Often this so-called "weakness" is caused by lack of nutrition, the result of weakness or disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases and weaknesses of the stomach and its allied organs are cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When the weak or diseased stomach is cured, diseases of other organs which stem remote from the stomach but which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, are cured also.

The strong man has a strong stomach. Take the above recommended "Discovery" and you may have a strong stomach and a strong body.
