Center of Population.
[World's Work.]
One of the most interesting results of the census will be the determination of the center of population. It has been hitherto in Indiana for a generation, unwilling to leave the state of swamps and mephitic miasms. There are indications, however, that the mysterious point may have been attracted toward the west and south, and a bare possibility that the Hoosier state will be at last forsaken. It is certain that there has been a remarkable growth of city population in Texas and Oklahoma. It is already clear, too, that the increase of city population has not been so rapid as in the previous decade. The biggest and the most cities are in the east.
It would, however, require a jump of seventy miles for the "center" to clear Indiana, and only once since the census began has so long a jump been made. Between 1850 and 1860 the point passed over eighty-one miles. The average 10-year trip is thirty-seven miles, but in the last decade, 1890 to 1900, only fourteen miles were passed. Always the movement has been toward the west, the path following closely the thirty-ninth parallel of latitude.
It was just 120 years ago, in 1790, that the center of population was first located—on the eastern shore of Maryland. Ten years later saw it eighteen miles west of Baltimore. The next decade witnessed the acquisition of the Louisiana territory, a fact which betrayed itself in a southern trend of the point during the years 1800 and 1820. Then it resumed its movement due west, marking spots forty, fifty-five and eighty miles apart. By 1860 it had reached a spot twenty miles south of Chillicothe, O. Then, at first with a slight northward tendency, it passed on for its sojourn near Columbus, Ind.
The census makes no effort to show the center of political power, but it may safely be concluded that this also has not moved toward the east during the decade past.

Bank Robber Suspect Released.
Sidney, Sept. 15.—The grand jury caused the release of "Blackie" Miller, who was arrested at Sioux City on June 15 and lodged in jail as being suspected of having a part in the Imogene bank robbery of March 19.
Walla, the only one of the trio who has been apprehended, was brought here from Anamosa by the next train, but failed to give sufficient proof of his identity to warrant the prosecution in holding him.
Miller seemed to have sufficient money, as he had retained some of the best legal talent in Sioux City to represent him. Released from jail he immediately left town.

The Automobile Here to Stay.
There is only one thing the matter with the automobile business, and that is what ought to be—it is now going thru the transition period, from the "game" and "fad" stages to a commercial, tried and accepted basis.
Until now the automobile situation has been one of experiment, education and confidence inspiring. Man, woman and child now have faith in this self-propelled vehicle, and the glare and gimmer of its "coming out" will fade away, but the motor car will go on forever, serving humanity both for business and pleasure.
The fault found with the automobile business, which has come to my notice, consists of:
First—Bankers in the west instituted a boycott. This was foolish. I think it was directed by Wall street, which loses sight of the fact that the automobile business during the panic of 1907 saved the day; that today it gives thousands of men employment; that it keeps other factories, such as foundries, busy day and night; that it feeds money into the veins of almost every phase of our industrial life, and that, in the long run, the bankers profit. Then, too, who appointed these bankers as guardians over how we should spend our money? I think it better for ten people to own a car each, than for the banker to own ten and the other nine have none?
Second—That the motor car is an economic waste and a luxury. Men have committed suicide after losing their money in the stock markets and others have wasted their earnings on private trains. This is the nature of extravagant and foolishly people, and because this nature may have in some cases been directed into the auto's direction, it is not the fault of the car. Because some people mortgaged their homes for cars is no sign that the machine is a menace to our American homes. It is a boon to society. It saves lives, adds pleasure, gives recreation and brings families into closer communion.
Third—That the automobile is a profitable investment it has been proven a time and money saver. It helps the farmer in many ways, aids the physician, facilitates the work of the solicitor and collector, and the commercial truck has been proven able to do the work of three horse-drawn wagons at less expense. This we have demonstrated in service of the United States postoffice in our own city, Indianapolis.

Third—That the market is overstocked. This is exaggerated. Other lines of business often carry a thirty days' surplus on hand and, in many cases, manufacturers who have cars stored have not in excess of thirty days' allowance. Then, too, this cry came from the period when builders were changing from 1910 to 1911 models, and naturally there is a halt when perhaps new machinery is installed and the plants are overhauled. The day is coming, I believe, when there will be less of this "manufacturing business" every time another year is added to the calendar, because cars are now more standardized.
The overstocked complaint reminds me of the story of two cranberry merchants. One cut the prices on his berries because they were not good and "sold" for a while. The other had good berries and was not popular among the customers until they learned when he was regarded by their trade. So when I hear of manufacturers "closing out" cars, I simply say "bad cranberries."
In short, the auto does not threaten the financial stability of the country, but the mere fact that the farmer, upon whom we all depend, can afford cars is to me a sign of prosperity. It is logical to step from the horse-power age to the gas-power age. The farmer would turn the hand of the clock of progress back to the ox-cart. Man becomes more civilized as he conquers the science of locomotion.
