The decision of the lower court in the sensational case of Dr. E. A. Cantonwine versus Bosch Brothers, of Vanclieve, was affirmed by the supreme court today. The case was tried in this city in the district court, Judge Bradshaw presiding, in the fall of 1908, and was appealed to the supreme court in January, 1909.

Cantonwine sued Bosch Bros. for $6,500 claiming that he had been forced to pay them a large sum of money under threat of prosecution, the firm claiming that Cantonwine, while employed in their store had taken money and papers.

When tried here he proved of a most sensational character and attracted great attention. The decision was against Cantonwine and he took an appeal to the supreme court. In its decision to day the supreme court upheld the decision of the lower court.

The claim of Cantonwine, with interest and costs to date, would probably amount to $10,000.

New Fiction at Library. Among the new fiction at the public library are the following books, brief synopses of which will be of interest:

Mason's "The Godparents" is a slight but entertaining tale of a self-centered young woman, who is forced by a determined man to abandon a European trip in order to assist him in reclaiming their godchild, who has fallen into the clutches of designing people. Their unique method of accomplishing this, and a camping experience in the Pennsylvania mountains, with the inevitable love affair, make the story.

Rohlf's "The House of the Whispering Pines" is a story of the murder of a beautiful and distinguished woman in a deserted country club. Its distinctive merits lie in the gruesome intricacies of the plot, with the love story it involves, and the well differentiated characterizations, rather than in any particular ingenuity of detective method employed in solving the mystery.

Taylor's "Caleb Trench" is the story of a young northerner who goes into business in a Kentucky town, becomes a lawyer and succeeds in bringing about some political reforms.

"Lady Merton, Colonist" by Ward—A traveling English woman, charming and complex product of old-world civilization, is so carried away by her perception of the vast forces and possibilities shaping the Canadian northwest that she forsakes her traditions and accepts for herself a new world destiny as typified in the forceful, personality of a rising young Canadian.

De la Pasture's "The Tyrant" depicts the life of an English family under the domination of its despotic head, a country squire, who sees in his wife and grown-up children only slaves and chattels and in his home life an opportunity for tyranny. The story concerns itself with the wife's courageous assumption of authority during her husband's absence and the happy, far-reaching consequences for her children.

Gordon's "The Foreigner" is a story of the Saskatchewan in which the Canadian northwest is represented as a crucible fusing differing races and peoples into one nation. The "foreigner" is the son of a Russian patriot, sworn to blood vengeance on his father's betrayer. He acquires western civilization and ideals of manhood and in a final struggle renounces his purpose.

Bosher's "Mary Cary" is the story of an orphan, in which the latter describes very cleverly the matron and teachers and life in the school. "Kilmory of the Orchard," by Montgomery—The secluded old apple orchard in which Eric Marshall, a young Canadian, finds the beautiful, the dumb Kilmory, is on Prince Edward Island. Eric is the son of a wealthy man and had come to the island to teach school for a month as a substitute for a sick friend.

Lynde's "Taming of Red Butte Western"—The Red Butte Western is a railroad in the southwest. When the owners decided to do away with the long prevailing lawless condition, they chose a young engineer to go out there and do the "taming." He has a hard struggle against lawlessness, strikes, collisions, and bloodshed, but wins out.

Warner's "Just Between Ourselves" chronicles the adventures of a party of six Americans, whom the mistaken zeal of one of their number has gathered together in a German jumping-off place on the outermost edge of the Hartz mountains.

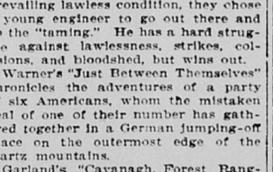

Garland's "Cavanaugh, Forest Ranger" is a western story dealing with the new great principles of conservation of the national natural resources.

A Reliable Medicine—Net a Narcotic. Mrs. F. Marti, St. Joe, Mich., says Foley's Honey and Tar saved her little boy's life. She writes: "Our little boy contracted a severe bronchial trouble and as the doctor's medicine did not cure him, I gave him Foley's Honey and Tar in which I have great faith. It cured the cough as well as the choking and gagging spells, and he got well in a short time. Foley's Honey and Tar has many times saved us much trouble and we are never without it in the house."
