The RING and the MAN

WITH SOME INCIDENTAL RELATION TO THE WOMAN

CHAPTER XVIII.
Something to Live Up To. Gormly was usually an early riser; but on the morning before election day he slept until an unprecedentedly late hour. He was utterly worn out with the strain of the campaign, anyway, and the occurrences of this last night had almost prostrated him. There was ordinarily nothing much to be done on the next day, the Monday preceding election day. One final meeting was scheduled for Monday night, and that was all.

It was perhaps nine o'clock when he woke up. He was soon bathed and dressed. He had signaled, as was his custom, at the proper time for the serving of his simple breakfast. It was ready for him when he entered the dining room. Some was there in attendance as usual. A pile of morning papers lay on the buffet. Gormly made a step toward them; but checked himself.

"Why," he thought, "should I spoil my breakfast by reading what the newspapers have to say on the important subject of my confession? The news will keep. Let me at least eat in peace."

"Beg pardon, sir," began Some deferentially; "but aren't you going to look over the papers, sir, before you eat?"

"No, thank you, Some. I can guess pretty well what they will say."

But Some was unusually persistent as well as greatly agitated. He had been up early and had read every scrap in every paper.

"I hope you'll excuse me, Mr. Gormly, sir," he began; "but I really think it'll add to your appetite if you will at least look over The Planet, sir."

Gormly shook his head and frowned a little.

"That will do, Some," he said somewhat shortly. "I will see the papers later."

After this somewhat peremptory remark the man naturally subsided, though his interest and excitement were plainly visible in his nervous movements. He was usually the most delightfully cool and imperturbable of attendants.

"You mustn't take this thing so greatly to heart, Some," said Gormly at last.

"Indeed, sir," returned the man, "we're all so set on having you elected, and other things, sir, that—"

What he was going to say remained unsaid, for after that delightful portmanteau which can easily be compassed by chroniclers of such veracious tales, I now am pleased to record that the bell of the door of the apartment cut across the further revelations of Some with a loud, clear ring.

"See who it is, Some," said Gormly indifferently.

"It's been ringing all morning, sir," said the man, turning to leave the room. "There's been the greatest crowd of people here, reporters and newspaper men, and Mr. Watson, and a number of gentlemen who are campaigning for you, and the street's packed with people outside, too."

"Is my friend the chief of police there?"

"No, sir. But there's a squad of officers under a sergeant, and they're making people that haven't any business go on."

"Well, see who it is this time," said Gormly as the bell rang again.

Some was back in a few minutes. "It's the janitor, sir. He says the reception room down stairs and the hall's filled with people asking to see you. He says the tenants of the building can't get in or out, and he wants to know what to do."

Gormly glanced at the clock. It was half-past nine.

"Tell them that I will see them all at the store in the auditorium at half-past ten," he replied. "Tell them it's useless to wait here now; that I can't see anybody at present."

Gormly heaved a deep sigh as he finished his breakfast. "Well," he thought, "I have to face them, and perhaps the sooner the better. Now, for the papers."

He looked around for Some; but that functionary had not yet appeared. He pushed back his chair, rose, walked over to the buffet, and picked up the first one. Some had been careful to see that the top of the pile and the place of honor was occupied by The New York Planet. From the headlines, Gormly saw, as he supposed he would, that his letter and the accompanying story covered the entire first page. He had scarcely glanced at it when Some re-entered the room, if possible in greater agitation than ever.

"Beg pardon, sir," he began, his usual method of address.

"Well, what is it?"

"There's two people in the drawing room asking to see you."

excitement, too, that it seemed to preface something of importance. At any rate, after a moment's reflection, the merchant decided from the strangeness of the situation that he would see the people mentioned.

As Gormly entered the sunny, cheerful drawing room, the occupants rose to greet him. One was young Haldane, the other was his sister. Haldane was intensely excited. He rushed at Gormly with the enthusiasm of a boy; grasped his hand, and wrung it frantically.

"It's all right," he shouted. "It's turned out better than anybody could have expected. It's killed that opposition dead. Everybody is for you now."

Gormly heard him as in a dream. He allowed him to shake his hand as he might have shaken a pump handle, could that ancient and useful article have been found in New York. He was looking with all his soul in his glance at Eleanor Haldane, who had not come forward, but stood by the chair in which she had sat, her hands tightly clasping the low back of it.

The color that had flooded her face when she first saw him had subsided almost as quickly as it had come. She was very pale and trembling.

"Through, strange, bewildering, rushed through Gormly's mind. What could Miss Haldane be doing there? What did she want? Why had she come? She had heard of the incident. He remembered that her brother had taken her one copy of his letter last night. What did his presence mean?"

"I just came down here," continued young Haldane, "to tell you these things to relieve your anxiety, and to bring Eleanor. She wanted to see you about—well, you know about what, of course."

Gormly did not know at all; but he nodded vaguely.

"Of course, by this time you've read all about it in The Planet. That old miser came in like a scene in a play. It was perfectly splendid, and I suppose," he looked meaningly at his sister, "his glance calling the color once more to her cheek, 'that you have read the other communication, which is scarcely less important.'"

Gormly stared at him in utter amazement.

"I must say," he continued mischievously, "that for a man who is getting everything he wants as you are, you are singularly undemonstrative about it."

"Mr. Gormly," interposed the woman, "I don't believe that you have read the morning papers."

"Not yet, Miss Haldane."

"Oh!" cried the girl in great dismay. "By Jove!" exclaimed the young man, "to think of it! I should have had the first copy from the press brought to me if I had been in your place. Well, then, I'll tell you the whole story. Or you've got it in The Planet and you can read it yourself. We'll excuse you while you glance over it; won't we sit?"

"I don't understand," said Gormly, lifting the paper slowly. He had not yet taken his eyes off Miss Haldane.

"On second thoughts," said the young man, "I guess Eleanor had better tell you herself. If you'll excuse me, you two, for a few moments, I'll go into the library."

"Livingstone!" cried the girl imploringly; but her brother only laughed as he left the room, carefully closing the door behind him.

"What is it that I am to be told, Miss Haldane?" asked Gormly, stepping toward her, paper still in hand.

SCHOOL MAN BOUNCED.

Sheldon Superintendent Accused of Making Love to Pupil.

Paullina, Nov. 1.—The town of Sheldon in the northern part of this county is minus a superintendent of schools plus a sensation, all on account of a janitor who set a trap for Superintendent J. T. White and is said to have caught him in the act of making love to an 18-year-old girl, who is a member of the senior class of the Sheldon high school.

The story of the affair is to the effect that the janitor of the school building, James Rider, had suspicions of intimacy between Superintendent White and the girl, and on last Friday evening called in Marshal Peavey and secured him in a closet off the superintendent's room. After school was out the two victims of the surprise party came to the room and the marshal claims to have been witness to a scene of lovetaking which brought a blush to his official face. He says there was kissing and hugging enough to make a couple of comic operas and a Robert Chambers novel.

The superintendent, who was brought before the mayor for trial, but no criminal charge could be brought against him. Consequently the prisoner was freed, and at a hurried called meeting of the school board the superintendent's resignation was asked and he was given twenty-four hours to get out of town. He is supposed to have gone to the Twin Cities, but no one knows. He has a wife and two children, who are left in Sheldon.

ENGINEER SNYDER'S PROMOTION

Iowa Falls, Nov. 1.—With the promotion of Fireman Bert Snyder to the position of engineer, with headquarters at Hawarden, the last employee of the old C. I. & D. which was absorbed by the C. & N. W. a few years ago, leaves the line of the old road between Eldora Junction and Eldora.

Mr. Snyder entered the employ of the Northwestern as a messenger boy at the depot in Eldora and later became an operator. He then entered the train service of the old company and a few years ago became extra engineer. When the Northwestern was purchased by the C. I. & D. Snyder entered his proper class as fireman and, having passed all the required examinations, is now given an engine and for the present will have charge of the company's switch engine near Hawarden. Mr. Snyder has been a member of the C. I. & D. for one of the most popular railroad men that ever took a run in this part of the state.

LIQUID CURES ECZEMA WHERE SALVES FAIL

In regard to skin diseases, medical authorities are now agreed on this: Don't imprison the disease germs in your skin by the use of greasy salves, and thus encourage them to multiply. A true cure of all eczematous diseases can be brought about only by using the healing agents in the form of a liquid.

WASH THE GERMS OUT.

A simple wash: A compound of Oil of Wintergreen, Thymol and other ingredients as combined in the D. D. D. Prescription. This penetrates to the disease germs and destroys them, then soothes and heals the skin as nothing else has ever done.

A 25 cent trial bottle will start the cure, and give you instant relief.

For Business Use

There are a great many places and occasions when the possibility of getting extra heat immediately effects an economy by decreasing the discomfort of the worker. In the office, in the early morning or late at night, before or after the steamheat is on, it is of importance to have extra heat. In the builder's outside office, in the shipping room, in railroad stations, in studios, the is often a necessity. It is safe, smokeless and odorless. Apply a match, and it gives heat quickly. With four quarts of oil it burns nine hours. Heat is made-locking flame spreader, which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back so that the wick can be cleaned in an instant.

It has a cool handle and a damper top. An indicator always shows the amount of oil in the font. The filler-cap is put in like a cork in a bottle, and is attached to the font by a chain.

The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged, because of a new device in construction, and consequently, it can always be easily unscrewed in an instant for reworking.

The Perfection Oil Heater is finished in japan or nickel. It is strong, durable, well made, built for service, yet light and ornamental.
