WHO IS TO BLAME? Where Will the Blame Attach if We Have a Coal Famine? There is plenty of coal of all kinds to be had now and the conditions for hauling and handling it are such that you have no one to blame but yourself if you are not able to secure coal for your needs later in the winter when bad weather reduces the quantity of coal available. We can not store enough coal for every one but we can deliver it to you now. Make sure by storing your own coal. GREGORY COAL, COKE & LIME COMPANY. John Steen. The Continent, the Presbyterian journal that has recently renounced its former name, The Interior, examines an act of the Presbytery in this liberal vein: New York Presbytery has ordained John Steen to the ministry. This news to a few—we are sorry for the pain of their loyal hearts—will be equivalent to news that the Presbyterian church has stepped another step down. But the Continent points it as a warning to the Presbytery that has stepped another step forward, just as it always does when it has the good fortune to add to its ministry a dead-in-earnest young fellow acquainted with Jesus Christ and eager to preach that Jesus is God manifest in the flesh, and that he has died for sinners, and that he rises from the dead to be the living captain of salvation for his church in every age. All of these things Mr. Steen at his examination for ordination confessed in straight-out explicit terms with neither hesitancy nor qualification, joyfully testifying that faith in these things is what enlists him for service in the ministry of his master. Moreover, the young licentiate bore witness with equal clearness to his unshaken confidence in the bible as the revelation of God's will and truth to man. And what Steen believes, he believes. Friends and opposers alike agree that he is incapable of misrepresenting himself for any sake or cause. Being asked what he had to say about the virgin birth, he replied that he has no opinion on that point. He said he had no opinion on that point, but knowing that the subject is still a matter of contention among scholars and not having had enough study to arrive at a conclusion about it himself, he wished to be allowed to reserve his opinion. Either way, he could make no difference in his faith in the incarnation of God in Jesus Christ. Further required to express himself concerning the resurrection of Lazarus, Mr. Steen made it clear that he made no question of the power of Jesus Christ to raise the dead from the grave, but he could not help knowing of the question that some devout scholars raise concerning the character of the gospel of John—whether or not it is an historical book—and therefore he again desired to be excused from an affirmation. But he expressly affirmed his acceptance of the synoptic gospels as historic, and made particular mention of his acceptance of the story of Jairus. Above all, he declared it his aspiration to convert men of the present hour to faith in Jesus as their resurrection and their life.

Try This When Your Hair is Dusty. (From the New York Herald.) "When the hair is dusty and dull, and you want to clean it quickly, just sprinkle thru it a little dry shampoo powder made by mixing four ounces of Orris root with four ounces of starch. "Then brush the hair thoroughly and not only will it be clean, but it will have a rich and glossy luster that can be given in no other way. So little time is required for this dry shampoo that it can be done profitably whenever the hair is dressed. "There is excellent for the scalp and gives the hair new life and vigor. The regular use of this mixture heightens the natural color, while washing the hair with water too often causes it to lose color and become dull and brittle."

the ethical sense perhaps most clearly is seen in the history of religions. Indeed it is possible to estimate the defects and merits of a religion, and to know how far along in the process of development a religion is, by the emphasis which it lays on goodness. Judaism and christianity are great ethical religions. Therein lies their excellence. But are right and wrong real? Is there any difference between goodness and badness, or is the distinction purely artificial and arbitrary? What is goodness and what is badness? The schoolmen battled long over Plato's question, whether good is good because God wills it, or whether God wills it because it is good. In a word, we may say that moral goodness has a social basis. That which is good for people is morally good. That is morally good which makes for the welfare of the doer and of all who are affected by his act; and that is morally bad which is detrimental to the doer and his fellows. The "better-not" becomes a "must-not" because "categorical imperatives." The moral sense is the latest and finest product of the cosmic process and goodness is the goal of evolution.

Adulteration. [Rt. Rev. Samuel Fallows.] The war in England and the United States against the adulteration of food and medicine and liquors has been almost like "the thirty years war" for ferrency and detection. The whole variety of vested interests on the side of impure goods was marshaled to fight the reform. Doctor Hassall of London led the attacks in his stirring scientific papers in the London Lancet. The clergy and the press came to the aid of this brave physician and his noble co-workers, and finally parliament passed a law which today is rigorously enforced, protecting the people against the injurious frauds of which they had been the helpless victims. Congress after congress was importuned to take similar steps in our own country and was met by the determined opposition of the great army of manufacturers and dealers profiting by the sale of adulterated articles. As across the water, physicians and health commissioners were here in the van, ably seconded by the press and the pulpit, fighting the colossal evil, until at length a natural pure food law was placed upon the statute books. But the authorities are finding that persistent efforts are still put forth to evade the law and deceive the public. The most rigid christian moralist can not visit the men who are struggling all the time against the tendencies and practices about them and reducing the evils of trade in their own cases to the minimum with anything like constant attention. They are forced into a warfare, as nations are often forced into an armed struggle for existence, in which there is the necessity for a departure, however lamentable it may be, from the high moral standard to be scrupulously observed in the time of peace. For the parties who unscrupulously and wantonly bring on the war and create the conditions for the abnormal state of things there must be condemnation, loud, deep, unsparring. For those who are forced into it, regret and pity and sympathy mingle with the censure.

Dogmatism. (Jenkin Lloyd Jones.) The disputing deacons who tried to corner Jesus in the temple and therefore to weaken his power upon the multitude "who hung upon him" during the excitement of the annual feast, which culminated in the tragedy of Calvary, may well be taken as representatives of dogmatism in religion; those who would undertake to formulate the spiritual life in the terms of a creed, that affirmations of the intellect, in short, give to religion dogmatic foundations. Jesus not only ignored, but indignantly condemned the clean-handed Pharisee in his conceit and complacency. He set him down as a broken-hearted publican with all of his shortcomings. He did not hesitate to tell the dogmatists that the publicans and harlots were nearer to the kingdom than they were. A dogmatic foundation is an inadequate one for religion, and those who insist upon it menace the growth of the same. Creed limitations will always exclude more of the children of light than they will include. It is greatly to be regretted that the present splendid manifestation of the power of combination among the churches, the much-needed appeal of the spirit to the spirit witnessed by the impressive evangelistic movement going on in Chicago today, should be handicapped by a theological insistence, a creed interpretation which many good and wise men and women tender-hearted seekers can not indorse.
