George Gregory.

Not often does a play that has its first success in Chicago, win the New York City public without an effort; but an exception must be granted in the case of "Baby Mine," the now famous farce by the author of "Polly of the Circus," Margaret Mayo. "Made in Chicago," is the label carried by this comic play; for not only was the farce first acted there, but the incident on which the play is based was a Chicago happening, and was the subject of a long dispatch from Chicago to the New York Times in which newspaper, the article was read by Miss Mayo, this giving her the idea that underlies what has been called the funniest play ever written. The quoted words were used by Ashton Stevens, the critic of the Chicago Examiner in his review of this laughing success in the issue of Thursday, June 3, 1910. At the new Odeon Wednesday evening. Prices 25, 50, 75 cents, $1 and $1.50.

It is not known definitely as yet whether or not the second team will meet the Grinnell second team next Saturday.

Wants to Quit.

Editor T-R: Now the state election being passed and as the returns show a marked falling off in the republican vote in Iowa, what is the republican majoring to do to close up the political strife which has and yet exists in the republican ranks of the party in Iowa?

My experience during fifty-five years a legal voter in the state and county of Marshalltown prove to me that just so long as factions of any county, state or nation undertake to dominate and coerce the people just so long strife and contention will exist.

Now what is the best thing to do under the present existing circumstances? The writer of this article has been a careful and constant reader of the papers of Iowa of both (so-called) progressive and standpat persuasion, and after much consideration and thought, can only come to the one conclusion, and that is just so long as the newspapers of Iowa continue to parade before the people their smart sayings as they think them to be, just so long strife and contention will prevail. Why not stop these words of sarcasm for awhile and see what the result might be. To illustrate, two men differ upon a question and a multiplicity of words between them is kept up. What follows? Echo answers. Will not the same rule with state and nation bear the same results? Echo answers again.

The writer could give many instances in which serious results have been experienced and the ties of friendship broken by the persistent multiplicity of words between men and neighborhoods, and in many cases no good cause existed.

Would not the same rule apply in Iowa politics? I think so. Voters and newspaper editors, all alike, have no good excuse to quarrel over a bone that has no meat upon it. Now as this is an age of arbitration my opinion is, when we cease our criticisms and back-biting contentions and strife will be of the past. Let us remember one truth, that John's opinions may be equal to ours. Come, let us reason together and all will be well.
