Chorn, claiming of you judgment establishing the plaintiffs estate, to-wit: Lot Number Two (2) in Block Number Four (4) in the Town of Marshalltown, in the County of Marshall, State of Iowa, and that you be barred and forever estopped from having or claiming any right or title to the premises adverse to the plaintiff.

Such petition alleging that plaintiff is the owner in fee simple of said premises.

That on July 28, 1855, one Greenleaf M. Woodbury owned a tract of land including said lot and platted the same into lots and blocks as the town of Marshalltown, and in August, 1856, conveyed by deed said lot to Sarah Chorn, and on Nov. 25, 1870, one Charles Brenneck obtained a tax deed of said lot and on Jan. 2, 1872, said Brenneck conveyed said lot to defendant Timothy Brown and said Brown afterwards during the lifetime of said Sarah Chorn (date not known) executed a deed of said lot to said Sarah Chorn which deed was lost and not recorded.

That on Oct. 19, 1903, said Sarah Chorn, then a widow, died owning said lot leaving as her only heirs at law this plaintiff, defendant George Puntney, John R. Palmer, Alice Palmer, all minors, and Maude Palmer, Fay Palmer, Lucile Palmer and Kate Palmer, minors.

And that by reason of the mistakes and defects of conveyance as above set forth in said deeds and by reason of the loss of said deed from Timothy Brown to Sarah Chorn and the defects in said partition proceedings, judgment and referee's deed, the unknown claimants of said property, and the known and unknown defendants, sane and insane, minors and adults, claim some interest in said lot adverse to the plaintiff.

That all the unknown defendants claim to own said property in fee simple which they claim to have derived as heirs and assigns of said Leroy Spencer, Temperance A. Ewing, Peter Ewing and Sarah Chorn.

Now, unless you appear and make defense thereto at or before noon of the second day of the next January term of said court to be begun and held at Marshalltown, Iowa, on the 2nd day of January, A. Feet So Sore Couldn't Walk Down Stairs-- TIZ Cured Her Quick

If you have sore feet, tired feet, sweaty feet, lame feet, tender feet, smelly feet, corns, callouses or bunions, read what happened to Mrs. Crockett, of Jeffersonville, TIZ Cured Her Quick. After the second treatment she walked downstairs one foot at a time. She has not been able to walk downstairs before in past five years, except by stepping down on each step with one foot at a time. This is remarkable. Send five more boxes. No matter what ails your feet or what under heaven you have used without getting relief, just use TIZ. It's different. It acts right off. It cures sore feet to stay cured. It's the only foot remedy ever made which acts on the principle of drawing out all the poisonous exudations which cause sore feet. Powders and other remedies merely clog up the pores. TIZ cleans them out and keeps them clean. You will feel better the first time it's used. Use it a week and you can forget you ever had sore feet. There is nothing on earth that can compare with it. TIZ is for sale at all druggists, 25c per box, or direct, if you wish, from Walter Luther Dodge & Co., Chicago, Ill.

CHAPTER XVI. BOYD broke out roughly: "I tell you, I've heard enough of that talk, Alton. Anybody but an idiot would know that Cherry is far too good for what you suggest. And when you insult her you insult me." "Oh, she's good enough," said Clyde. "They're all good, but not perhaps in the way you mean." "How do you know?" "I don't know, but Fraser does. He's known her for years. Haven't you, Fraser?" But the adventurer's face was like wood as they turned toward him. "I don't know nothing," replied "Fingerless" Fraser, with an admirable show of ignorance. "Well, judge for yourself," Clyde turned again to Emerson. "Who is she? Where did she come from? What is she doing here alone? Answer that, now, she's interested in this deal just as much as any of us, and if you don't ask her to take a hand I'm going to put it up to her myself." "You'll do nothing of the sort!" Boyd cried savagely. Clyde rose hastily, and his voice was shaking with excitement as he stammered: "See here, Boyd, you're to blame for this trouble, and now you either get out of it or buy my stock." "You know that I can't buy your stock." "Then I'll sell wherever I can. I've been stung, and I want my money. Only, remember, I offered the stock to you first."

"You've got a swell chance to make a turn in Kalvik," said Fraser. "Why don't you take it to Marsh?" "I will!" declared Alton. "You wouldn't do a trick like that?" Emerson questioned quickly. "Why not? You won't listen to my advice. You're playing with other people's money, and it doesn't matter to you whether you win or lose. If this enterprise fails I suppose you can promote another." "Get out!" Boyd ordered, in such a tone that the speaker obeyed with ludicrous haste. "Did you know Cherry before you came to Kalvik?" Boyd asked, searching his companion's face with a look the man could not evade. "Only casual." "Where?" "None—the year of the big rush." "During the mining troubles, eh?" "Sure." "What was she doing?" "Mining her business. She's good at that." Fraser's eyes had become green and fishy as usual. "What do you know about her?" "Well, I know that a lot of fellows would go through for her at the drop of a hat. She could have most anything they've got. I guess. Most any of them miners at Nome would give his right eye or his only child, or any little thing like that, if she asked it." "What else?" "Well, she was always considered a right good looking party." "Yes, yes; of course. But what do you know about the girl herself? Who is she? What is her history?" "Now, sir, I'm an awful poor detective," confessed "Fingerless" Fraser. "I've often noticed that about myself. If I was the kind that goes snooping around into other people's business, listening to all the gossip I'm told, I'd make a good witness. But I ain't. No, sir, I'm a rotten witness." Despite this indirect rebuke, Boyd might have continued his questioning had not George Ball's heavy step followed outside. A moment later the big fellow entered. "What did you find at the traps?" asked Emerson eagerly. "Nothing," George spoke shortly. "The fish struck in this morning, but our trap is corked." He wrenched off his rubber boots and fung them savagely under a bench.

Those in the kyaks astern cast off and paddled toward the beach. "I've got fifty men, the best on the river. I tried to get more, but—there aren't any more." "Fingerless" Fraser slapped himself resoundingly upon the thigh and exploded profanely. Boyd seized the girl's hands in his and wrung them. "Cherry, you're a treasure!" The memory of his desperate resolution of death and his voice trembled with a great thankfulness. "Don't thank me!" Cherry exclaimed. "It was more Constantine's work than mine." "But I don't understand. These are Marsh's men." "To be sure, but I was good to them when they were hungry last winter, and I prevailed upon them to come. They aren't very good fishermen. They're awful lazy and they won't work half as hard as white men, but it's the best I could do." She laughed gladly, more than repaid by the look in her companion's face. "Now get me some lunch. I'm fairly starved." Big George, when he had fully grasped the situation, became the boss fisherman on the instant. Before the others had reached the cookhouse he was busied in laying out his crews and distributing his gear. The import he had happened; victory was in sight; the fish were running. He cared to know no more. That night the floors of the fish dock groaned beneath a weight of silver-sided salmon piled waist high to a tall man. All through the cool, dim lit hours the ranks of Chinese butchers hunched and slit and slashed with swift, sure, tireless strokes, while the great building echoed hollowly to the clank of machines and the hissing sighs of the soldering furnaces. It seemed to Boyd that he had never felt such elation as during the days that followed. He trod upon air; his head was in the clouds. He joked with his men, inspiring them with his own good humor and untiring energy. He was never late again during the cold hours that he snatched for sleep. While the daily output was disappearing, Emerson drew consolation from the prospect that his pack would be large enough at least to avert utter ruin. Up at the trust's headquarters Willis Marsh was in a fine fury. As far as possible his subordinates avoided him. On the third day after Boyd's delivery Constantine sought him out in company with several of the native fishermen, translating their demand to be paid for the fish they had caught. "Can't they wait until the end of the week?" Emerson inquired. "No! They got no money—they got no grub. They say little baby is hungry, and they like money now. So soon they buy grub, they work some more." "Very well. Here's an order on the bookkeeper." Boyd tore a leaf from his notebook and wrote a few words on it, telling the men to present it at the office. As Constantine was about to leave he called to him: "Wait! I want to talk with you." The breed halted. "How long have you known Mr. Marsh?" "Me know him long time." "Do you like him?" "A flicker ran over the fellow's copy-face as he replied: "Yes. Him good man." "You used to work for him, did you not?" "Yes." "Why did you quit?" Constantine hesitated slightly before answering, "Me go work for Cherry." "Why?" "She good to my little broder. You savvy little children—so big?" "Yes, I've seen him. He's a fine little fellow. By the way, do you remember that night about two weeks ago when I was at Cherry's house—the night you and your sister went out?" "I remember." "Where did you go?" Constantine shifted his walrus soled boots. "What for you ask?" "Never mind! Where did you go when you left the house?" "Me go Indian village. What for you ask?" "Nothing. Only if you ever have any trouble with Mr. Marsh I may be able to help you. I like you, and I don't like him." (To Be Continued.)

Baby's Voice Mother's Friend

WITH A STARTLED GRY, CONSTANTINE WHIRLED, HIS FACE CONVULSED. He forth suddenly and plucked the fellow's sheath knife from its scabbard. With a startled cry, Constantine whirled, his face convulsed, his nostrils dilated like those of a frightened horse. But Emerson merely fingered the Indian's weapon carelessly, remarking: "That is a curious knife you have. I have noticed it several times." He eyed him shrewdly for a moment, then handed the blade back with a smile. Constantine slipped it into its place and strode away without a word. (To Be Continued.)
