Pitching Calmliner From Belleville De-livers Knockout Blow. David Taylor, nicknamed "Sam" because David of the Bible times wrote "Psalms" is some "pug." Taylor hails from the coalmining town of Belleville, Ill., which is not far from East St. Louis, known as the St. Clair county metropolis just across the Father of Waters from St. Louis, Mo. Now David, alias Sam, having been reared so close to the river, quite naturally takes on the river town spirit when he gets near the "ol' Mississippi," and at Clinton today displayed that spirit when he knocked out one Lloyd Kramer, a blacksmith, who had taken exceptions to Taylor's jesting at the smithy's song. Kramer is said to have a local reputation as a "scraper," having last night knocked out two boiler-makers whom Kramer accused of stealing his boat. A telegram to the Times-Republican this afternoon tells of the episode as follows: Special to Times-Republican. Clinton, July 25.—"Bugs" Taylor, pitcher on the Marshalltown baseball team, this morning knocked Lloyd Kramer, a local blacksmith, flat, when the latter picked Taylor out of a bunch who were laughing at Kramer's singing. Kramer last night knocked out two boiler-makers who are said to have stolen his boat. The police are looking for Kramer. Witnesses exonerate Taylor from responsibility for the trouble. DEATH NEAR STATE CENTER. Samuel E. Koehler Dies After Four Weeks' Sickness. Samuel Edward Koehler, aged 27, son of Mr. and Mrs. Christian F.
