AMUSEMENTS.
At the Casino.
For excellent characterization, and a story that touches the heart, told without any special thrills or show, 'Acquitted,' screened at the Casino Tuesday night, just about fills the bill. Wilfred Lucas, in the leading role of Carter, the trusted bookkeeper, gives a well high perfect picture of the steady, plodding middle-aged man, passionately devoted to his family and employers, with no particular ambition to rise above his present position.
His family is his whole life, and he is wrapped up in his two or three daughters, besides wanting to serve faithfully his employers. When, in the midst of this peaceful round of daily events, the cashier of the insurance company is murdered by the night watchman, a dope fiend, and Carter is accused of the crime, the shock stuns him. Fortunately an alert young reporter is in love with Carter's daughter, and he gets his prospective father-in-law freed of the unjust charges. The notoriety has done its work, however, and Carter is unable to get his old position back, or to find a new one. With what starting himself and family in the face, he resolves to commit suicide. Fortunately he is saved from this, and given his old position. The supporting company includes two actors who played the parts in 'The Birth of a Nation.' Rider, the cashier who is murdered, is played by Spottiswoode Aitken, who took the part of the father of the Cameron family, who was forced to see nearly all of his children killed in war. The actor who played the part of the reporter took the part of young Stoneman who fought opposite 'The Little Colonel' on the field of battle. 'Fatty' Arbuckle and Mabel Normand are featured in a well-worked-out comedy entitled 'He Did and He Didn't,' in which 'Fatty' is both a doctor and a jealous husband. Large audiences witnessed the pictures.
At the Strand.
With the background of California in the days of '49, Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid do bold and brave deeds in 'The Love Mask,' produced at the Strand Tuesday night to good-sized audiences. The story is that of a young sheriff, Dan Deering, who undertakes to capture an outlaw called 'Silver Spurs.' Kate Kenner, a woman miner, played by Miss Ridgely, has her claim stolen by 'jumpers' and the sheriff comes to her rescue. Later Kate impersonates 'Silver Spurs' and holds up the stage to get the money which has been put on board by the men who wrongfully deprived her of her claim. The girl is saved by the sheriff, and she is nearly hanged by the men of late citizens in his stead. Eventually she finds refuge in the sheriff's arms and is saved.

The story does not hang together as well as most of the Lasky productions, and there is nothing particularly different that stands out in the entire picture.
Photographs show interesting views of the United States army machine guns, lessons in carving, and a new department of 'Things You Should Know' which illustrates cleverly why the slides occur in the Panama canal.
At the Lyric.
Refreshing in its simplicity and joyfulness is 'Little Mary Sunshine,' pictured at the Lyric Tuesday night with Marie Osborne, a tiny bit of a girl in the leading part. She is handicapped by a sorrowing mother and a bibulous father. When mother dies, father runs away, and Mary is forced to seek shelter somewhere. She climbs into an auto belonging to a rich young chap who has been out with the boys and also been turned down by his sweetheart. He takes pity on Mary, lack of self-consciousness before the camera, being commendable in one of her age. The rest of the cast is capable.
Later she effects a reconciliation between Bob and his girl, and finds a good home with her new parents. 'Little Mary's' acting is very good, her lack of self-consciousness before the camera being commendable in one of her age. The rest of the cast is capable.
ANOTHER 'HIKER' THRU CITY.
Walter Wanderwel, German Sailor, is walking from Coast to Coast.
Walter Wanderwel, a young German sailor 24 years old, who has had more experiences of a sensational nature than usually come to one of his age, spent the day in the city while on his way from New York City to San Francisco. Wanderwel, which is his name assumed for reasons best known to himself, is making his long walk for two reasons—to rid himself of malaria contracted in Africa, and to gain the Pacific, where he may ship in safety.
Because he was a subject of Germany, and was serving on a vessel at sea, Wanderwel was arrested by British authorities at Santa Lucia, British West Indies. This was not long after the war broke out. He was released, however, thru the good offices of the American consul at Jamaica, after he had been in custody twenty-six hours, and thought that he was to be shot.
Wanderwel lives at Posen, Germany. His father, who has died since the war began, was for twenty-nine years in the German army as a veterinary surgeon. Wanderwel has been in the merchant marine service of his own country, England, Norway and this country. During a part of five years service he has served as mate and quartermaster. He was a sailor on the British steamer Clumberhall, Hamburg to Baltimore, when war was declared, and the German crew mutinied. This was the last voyage he made, and he developed following the outbreak of the war.
Having seen much of the world, Wanderwel talks interestingly. He speaks seven languages. He has traveled across Africa as a Russian tradesman, and has crossed the continent of Europe. Because it is not safe for him at this time to follow the sea in Atlantic service, he hopes to be able to ship on some vessel plying in the Pacific. By the time he reaches Frisco he also hopes to have ridden his system of malaria.
Wanderwel bears letters from German consulates in the east to the consul in San Francisco.

Several boys from St. Mary's parochial school will also help in the work.

The Most Important Room in Your House is Your Bath Room
There is not one person in ten, to speak conservatively, who is satisfied with his bath room, and it would not be a statement of exaggeration to say that there is not one person in every hundred but would like to have a better bath room than he has. There is no one item in the cost of construction of your home in which you can receive more value per dollar, nor more joy and comfort than you can in a properly selected and properly installed plumbing job. Give us a chance to serve you, and you will get a better bath room than if you attempted to find out how much money you can save on the plumbing bill. The plumbing contract is no place to save money in furnishing a home.
