"CIVILIZATION" TONIGHT

Wizardry of Photography and Thrilling Sea Scenes, and Powerful Battles Make the Great Drama That is Pictured in Thomas H. Ince's Production—"Civilization" at Odeon For Six Days.
A great drama that is pictured in Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization" which comes to the Odeon tonight and for six days but which is secondary to the great spectacular story, is told by the most subtle suggestion ever employed on the screen. It is no other than the great passion play that concerns the life, trial and death of Jesus Christ. "Civilization" tells the story of a count who dies in behalf of innocent women and children, in whose body Jesus returns to stop the awful slaughter of humanity in a world war.
The count is seen in the story proper as a human being, and the drama evolves about him as such; but in the situations and the settings and the circumstances one can read, as it were, between the pictures the story of Jesus. The count is led up on the mountain of hopes by the king and is tempted by the offer of a great possession, (the woman he loves) if he will but serve an evil purpose. Later, when he preaches peace, the count is stoned by a mob, arrested and brought before the king for trial. In the attitude and the spirit shown the imagination permits a vision of Christ before Pilate. Then, on his way to prison, the count sinks beneath his wounds. Here the producer has aided the spectators' imagination by leading in a vision of Christ sinking beneath the burden of his cross. The count is locked in a dingy prison. The king comes there to see the count and finds the spirit fled. Then the Christ appears to him and leads him forth to see the awful havoc of war he has waged.
This remarkable presentation of the passion play comes to the spectator in sober thoughts long after the great spectacle has been seen. The first view of the great cinema production strikes the visitor with the force of its magnitude, the power of the great battle scenes, the wizardry of the photography and the thrilling sea scenes. It is, however, a picture that sticks in the mind and its magnitude increases with reflection. Odeon.
In the Police Court.
Clyde Peterson, of Gladbrook, who was arrested for being drunk, was discharged by the mayor this morning after promising to pay $1 and the costs.
