

Half an hour after his dramatic exit Captain Elsha was pacing up and down the floor of the barn. It was an old refuge of his, a place where he was accustomed to go when matters requiring deliberation and thought oppressed him. As he turned in his stride he saw a shadow move across the sill of the big open door. He caught his breath and stopped.

Caroline entered the barn. She came straight to him and put her hands upon the lapels of his coat. Her eyes were wet and shining. "Caroline?" he faltered eagerly. "You good man?" she breathed softly. "Oh, you good man?" "Caroline?" His voice shook, but there was hope in it. "Caroline, you're goin' to take the money?" "Yes, Uncle Elsha. Mr. Sylvester has shown me that I must. He says

"You good man?" she breathed softly. "Oh, you good man!" you will do something desperate if I refuse. "I can't do it. And you'll take it really?" "Yes, Uncle Elsha. You won't hold it against me, my makin' you think you was poor and makin' you live in that little place and get along on just so much, and all that? Can you forgive me for doin' that?" "Forgive you? Can I ever thank you enough? I know I can't, but I can try all my life to prove what—" "S-s-h! S-s-h! There!" with a great sigh, almost a sob, of relief, "I guess this'll be a real Thankgivin' after all."

But a few minutes later another thought came to him. "Caroline," he asked, "I wonder if, now that things are as they are, you couldn't do somethin' else—somethin' that would please me an awful lot?" "What is it, uncle?" "It's somethin' perhaps I ain't got any right to ask. The other day you told me you cared for Jim Pearson, but that you sent him away 'cause you thought you had to earn a livin' for you and Steve. Now you know that you ain't got to do that. And you said you told him if you ever changed your mind you'd send for him. Don't you s'pose you could send for him now—right off—so he could get here for his big Thankgivin' of ours? Don't you think you could, Caroline?" "Send for him—now?" she asked in a low tone. "Yes; now—right off—in time for to-morrow."

"He could not get here," she whispered. "Yes, he could. If you send him a telegram with one word in it—'Come'—and sign it 'Caroline' he'll be here on tomorrow mornin's train or I'll eat my hat and one of Abbe's bonnets have in. Think you could, Caroline?" A moment, then in a whisper, "Yes, Uncle Elsha."

"Hoory! But—but," anxiously, "hold on, Caroline. Tell me truly now. You ain't doin' this just to please me? You mustn't do that, not for the world and all. You mustn't send for him on my account; only just for one reason—because you want him."

before. It was time for Dan to appear at the bend. "I hope to thunder Jim got that telegram," observed the captain for the twentieth time at least since breakfast. "So do I," replied his friend. "There's no reason why he shouldn't, is there?" "No, no sensible one, but I've scared up no less than a couple of hundred of the other kind. If he shouldn't come—my, my, she'd be disappointed!" He motioned with his head toward the window of Caroline's room. They turned in time to catch a glimpse of the girl as she parted the curtains and looked out on the road. She saw them looking at her, smiled, blushed and disappeared. Both men smoked in silence for a moment; then the captain said:

"Say, Sylvester, this New York cruise of mine turned out pretty good, after all, didn't it?" "Decidedly good. It was the making of your niece and nephew. Caroline realizes it now, and so will Steve."

"Hope so. It didn't do me any harm," with a chuckle. "I wouldn't have missed that little beat up the bay with Marm Dunn for a good deal. For a spell there we was bow abrest, and 'twas hard to tell who'd turn the mark first."

Sylvester laughed. "I'll tell you what, Captain Warren," he said. "I never saw you in better spirits. Do you know what I think? I think that for a chap who has just given away half of a good sized fortune and intends giving away the other half you're the most cheerful specimen I ever saw."

The captain laughed too. "I am, ain't I?" he said. "Well, I can say truthful what I never expected to say in my life—that once I was with ha' a million dollars. As for the rest of it, I'm like that millionaire—that—Hill Look! There comes Dan! See him?" "Steve!" cried the captain excitedly. "There's Steve! And—yes, there's somebody on the back seat. It's Jim! He's come! Hoory!"

"Wait! Sylvester cried. "I don't want to lose the rest of that sentence. You said you were like some millionaire. Who?" "Don't bother me!" cried Captain Elsha. "Who? Why, I was goin' to say I was like that millionaire chap who passes out a library every time he wakes up and happens to think of it. You know who I mean. Ahoy there, Jim! Ahoy, Steve!"

He was waving his hand to the passengers in the approaching vehicle. "That's the feller. I've come to feel about the way he says he does—that 'twould-be a crime for me to die rich."

Reason for Mosquitoes. Now, even the most foolish optimist would scarcely venture to claim that the transmission of disease and suffering to humanity is a "beneficial purpose." If the mosquito has a beneficial purpose it can be no other than to serve as a chastening influence upon the lives of men. As fleas exist only to keep dogs from forgetting that they are dogs, so mosquitoes may be designed by nature to induce a proper humility in mankind and also to impress upon the race the tremendous importance of trifles.

On Second Thought. David, who overdrives on his imagination, especially when with other children, was playing with Robert, who was visiting here from a small town. David was telling him that his mother knew of a building in Robert's town that was 960 feet tall. Robert said he would run and ask his mother if she knew the building, and David quickly spoke up: "Wait a minute, wait a minute; maybe it was only ninety feet tall."

Discouraging. It is very discouraging to a thoughtful man to note how the advice of our leading medical scientists is disregarded in this thoughtless, careless, and reckless age, and though we have watched closely ever since this panacea for the ills of the flesh was first advocated, we have been disappointed not to see so much as one of our adult female population walking about on all fours.

Training School For Savings. The financiers all tell us the saving of money is a habit, natural to a few and something to be acquired by most of us—a most deserving and commendable habit, however, and one which grows with acquaintance. We are inclined in this country to look at things in a large, generous way, and quite apt to despise the day of small things, or the doing of something which seems small in itself. Scarcely a column of any daily paper which does not tell of this or that enterprise the cost of which runs into millions of dollars. The idea of religiously putting away a dollar a week seems small in comparison, so "what's the use?"

There are many also whose false pride prevents them from going to the savings bank with a dollar every week, and who intend to wait until they have accumulated five or ten in order to deposit something worth while. And so the weeks pass and there seems no convenient time to part with that much, and the man doesn't save. While his purpose was not to establish a training school for savings, the Liberty bond bids fair to accomplish that highly desirable result. In many establishments where employees subscribed for bonds, it was arranged to have the cashier deduct the weekly installment for the bond from the pay envelope, and remit the bank where the subscription is placed. This not only saves the individual time otherwise spent in going to the bank, but materially reduces clerical work, for which no compensation is received in this case. Already most of those who bought the bonds on the weekly-payment plan have them one-fourth paid for. Soon the payments will be completed and the bond delivered. By that time there will doubtless be another issue of government bonds. If not, the savings bank. A banker studies money; he knows its value, and realizes the possibilities of its possession. Therefore he respects the man, woman, or child who saves his money, and nothing will be farther from his mind than to regard lightly even the smallest amounts that go into a savings fund.

Everyone should strive to have a bank account, especially every man and boy, be it ever so small. One loses nothing in the esteem of his employer and friends by being seen going into or coming out of a bank.

Neither does the individual lose any self-respect by being seen at a bank counter, which is more than can be said of some places. There are plenty of good banks; pick out one and stick to it; and when you are tempted to invest in some alluring get-rich-quick scheme, go to your banker and ask his advice. It will not cost you anything to do this, and may save you a loss you can't afford.

It may safely be assumed that if this course were pursued by all of us, the money sunk in swindles, false schemes, and impossible enterprises would be reduced to a point where it actually would not pay to make the attempt. Before investing, ask your banker—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Germans Leave Infernal "Tortoise." In an interesting illustrated article in the September Popular Mechanics Magazine, Lewis H. Freeman describes various more or less ingenious but always diabolical contrivances that the Germans have lately made a practice of leaving in trenches from which they have been driven by the allies on the western front. Among these one is described as follows: "An abomination of creased steel, looking more like one of the famous ceremonial kava bowls of the Samoans than anything else I have ever seen, has evidently been manufactured in considerable quantities for no other purpose than to furnish pleasant surprises to precipitate Tommies. The latter have nicknamed it the 'tortoise,' and until they learned that, like its slow-moving animal prototype, it was unsafe to take liberties with, several of them paid the penalty of their curiosity by being injured when it blew up as a consequence of their friendly prods of investigation. In that its very strangeness of appearance invites attention the tortoise is like the famous Trojan horse, and the consequences of investigation are, likewise, disastrous. The least touch to the wobbly thing establishes a contact, doubtless thru fulminate of mercury, on the same principle as employed in the floating mine, which detonated twenty or thirty pounds of explosive with a force that shattered the thick steel shell—creased as it was like the casing of a hand grenade—and scattered the fragments over a wide area. The menace of the tortoise was over as soon as Tommy learned to curb his curiosity. On my visit to a collecting depot I was allowed to 'play' with one of them, from which the 'teeth' had been drawn, and I must confess that the weird, wobbly thing might well excite considerable fascination upon one encountering it for the first time. One feels that he simply has to go up and give it a shove with the toe of his boot, just to watch it wobble, the very action calculated to make it 'put up back' and 'fly to pieces.'

Stomach and Liver Troubles. No end of misery and actual suffering is caused by disorders of the stomach and liver, and may be avoided by the use of Chamberlain's Tablets. Give them a trial. They only cost a quarter. For sale by all druggists.—Advertisement.
