Young Midshipman Traces Long Line Fighting Ancestry

Elton H. Bennett, a native Iowan, grandson of Quartermaster H. J. Bennett, of the soldiers' home, has enlisted as a midshipman in the United States navy, according to a letter just received by the young man's grandparents in this city.

It is not at all surprising that the young man should want to serve his country, as he traces back his ancestry to fighting stock that participated in the civil war, the war of 1812, and the revolutionary war. Young Bennett is a native of Fort Madison, a son of H. A. Bennett, now of Los Angeles, but formerly of Fort Madison, Des Moines, and Oskaloosa. The young man now is in training at San Francisco.

In completing the cycle of participation in this country's wars the young midshipman proudly may point to the fact that his mother's brother, Harry Brookover, was in the Spanish-American war; that his grandfathers, Bennett and Brookover, were in the civil war; also that his great grandfather, Daniel Bennett, also was in the civil war. Besides having two grandfathers and a great grandfather in the war of the rebellion, young Bennett can go back to the war of 1812, in which his great great grandfather, Asa Bennett, was a soldier, and to the revolutionary war, of which his great, great, great grandfathers, Bennett and Harris, were veterans.
