"It is these men you count on?"
 "Yes; but for me to gain their confidence and leadership will require time. The slightest slip would mean failure and merciless punishment. At best the situation is absolutely desperate—but I see no other solution."
 "And my service is deceit—the acting of a part to blind the eyes of Estada?"
 "I sincerely believe your greater chance of security lies in this course. The fellow is a supreme egotist; opposition will anger him, while flattery will make him subservient. You have the wit and discretion to hold him within certain limits. It is a dangerous game, I admit, and a disagreeable one, but the case requires desperate remedies."

 She lifted her eyes, searching my face through the dim light.
 "Geoffrey Carlyle," she said at last, a tremor in the low voice, "there is no sacrifice I would not make to preserve my honor. I hate this man; I dread his touch; I shrink from contact with him as I would from a snake, but I am not going to refuse to do my part. If you say this is right and justified I will consent."
 "I believe it is."

"And you will not lose faith in me?" she questioned earnestly. "It will not lower your belief in my womanhood?"
 "Nothing could do that. Mistress Dorothy, I want you to realize the depth of my interest and respect. Your friendliness has meant much to me, and I would never urge you to lower your ideals. But we must face this situation as it is. We possess but two weapons of defense—deceit or force. A resort to the latter is at present impossible. I cannot conceive that you are lowering yourself in any way by using the power you possess to escape violence."

"The power I possess?"
 "Yes—beauty and wit. These are your weapons, and most effective ones. You can play with Estada and defeat him—temporarily, at least. I confess there is danger in such a game—he is a wild beast, and his evil nature may overcome his discretion. Take this pistol. Keep it hidden about your person, but use it only when all else fails. You retain faith in me?"
 "Implicitly."

"And pledge yourself to your part, leaving me to attend to mine?"
 Her two hands clasped my fingers, her eyes uplifted.
 "Geoffrey Carlyle, I have always believed in you, and now, after the sacrifice you have made to serve me I can refuse you nothing you ask. I will endeavor to accomplish all you require of me. God knows how I hate the task; but I will do it for you. Only—only—her voice sank, "if—the beast lays hands on me he—he—pays the price. I could not do otherwise. Geoffrey Carlyle—I am a Fair-fax."

Satisfied with my mission and confident nothing more need be said, I arose to my feet.
 "Then we can do nothing further until I learn the disposition of the crew," I said quietly. "Estada is not likely to resort to extreme measures at present. That is why I believe you are comparatively safe now—his own position of command is in the balance."
 "I will see you again?"
 "Perhaps not here; it is too dangerous; but I will find means to communicate with you. Good-by."

We stood with hands clasped in the darkness. I thought she was going to speak again, but the words failed to come. Then suddenly, silently the door opened a mere crack, letting in a gleam of yellow light from the main cabin, while the crouching figure of a man, like a gliding shadow slipped through the aperture, closing the door behind him as softly as he had opened it. I heard her catch her breath and felt her hands grasp my sleeve, but I never stirred.

Who could he be? What might be the purpose of his entrance? But one answer occurred to me—Pedro Estada, driven by unbridled passions to attack the girl. I thrust her behind me, and took a step forward, with body poised for action. I was unarmed, but cared little for that in the swift desire to come to hand grips with the brute. I could hear him now, slowly and cautiously feeling his way toward us through the darkness.

Books for the Blind.
 The first book in English printed in raised or embossed letters for the use of the blind was issued at Edinburgh ninety-two years ago by James Galt. The first attempt to provide literature for the sightless was made in 1786 by Haüy at Paris, who invented a system for printing raised letters. Haüy used the Illyrian or Slavonian alphabet in the few brief works he published, and his project ended in failure.
 Galt, the Scotchman, vastly improved the system, using a modified Roman letter, and confining himself to lower case in preference to capitals. In 1834 Galt issued the Gospel of St. John, the first book of the bible ever printed for the blind. The work was taken up in America by Dr. Howe, the husband of Julia Ward Howe, then in charge of Perkins Institute in Boston, who printed the entire new testament in 1838. Dr. Howe issued the entire bible in raised characters in 1843, and a similar work was issued in Glasgow a few years later. The first magazine for the blind was established in England in 1855 by the Rev. W. Taylor, who devoted forty years of his life to the education of the sightless. A circulating library for the blind was founded in 1882 at the Perkins Institute in Boston, and libraries of this kind have since been established in nearly all large cities.
