"TANLAC HAS MADE LIFE WORTH LIVING FOR ME," SAYS VICTOR E. CARLSON.

"Tanlac has been worth its weight in gold to me, and words cannot express how grateful I am for it," was the emphatic statement made by Victor E. Carlson of 1105 South 4th street, Burlington, Iowa.

SAGE TEA DARKENS HAIR TO ANY SHADE

DON'T STAY GRAY! HERE'S AN OLD-TIME RECIPE THAT ANYBODY CAN APPLY.

The use of Sage and Sulphur for retarding faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

THE SECRET HOUSE

By EDGAR WALLACE

Author of "The Clue of the Twisted Candle," "Kate Plus 10," "The Man Who Knew," etc.

CHAPTER XX. T. B. Smith's inspection of the Secret House had yielded nothing satisfactory; he had not expected that it would; he was perfectly satisfied that the keen, shrewd brains which dominated the menage would remove any trace, there was of foul play.

"Where now?" asked Ella, as they stepped out of the house. "Back to Moor Cottage," said T. B., climbing into the car. "I am certain that we are on the verge of a big discovery. There is a way out of the cottage by some underground chamber, a way by which first Lady Constance and then Poltava were smuggled, and if it is necessary I am going to smash every panel in those two ground floor rooms, but I will find the way into Mr. Farrington's mystery house."

For half an hour the two men were engaged in the room which Poltava had been taken. They probed with center bits and gimlets into every portion of the room. The first discovery that they made was that the oaken panels of the chamber were backed with sheet iron or steel.

"It is a hopeless job; we shall have to get another kind of smith here to tear down all the panelings," said T. B., lighting the gloom of his despair with a little flash of humor.

He fingered the tiny locked cabinet and opened it again. "It is absurd," he laughed helplessly. "Here is the solution in these simple words, and yet we brainy folk from the Yards can not understand them!"

"God save the King!" said Ella ruefully. "I wonder how on earth that is going to help us."

A gasp from T. B. made him turn his face to his chief. T. B. Smith was pointing at the piano. In two strides he was across the room, and sitting on the stool he lifted the cover and struck a chord. The instrument sounded a little flat, and apparently had not received the attention of a tuner for some time.

"I am going to play 'God save the King,'" said T. B. with a light in his eyes, "and I think something is going to happen."

Slowly he pounded forth the familiar tune; from beginning to end he played it, and when he had finished he looked at Ella.

"Try it in another key," suggested Ella, and again T. B. played the anthem. He was nearing the last few notes when there was a click and he kept up. One long panel had disappeared from the side of the wall. For a moment the two men looked at one another. They were alone in the house, although a policeman was within call.

"I will go in first and see what happens," said Ella grimly. "There is a switch here," said T. B. He pulled it down and a small lamp glowed, illuminating a tiny lift cage.

"And here I presume are the necessary controlling buttons," said T. B., pointing to a number of white discs; "we will try this one."

He pressed the button and instantly the cage began to fall. It came to a standstill after a while and the men stepped out.

"Part of the old working," said T. B., "is very interesting. I have flashed his lamp over the walls to find the electrical connection. They were here, as they were at the other end, perfectly accessible. An instant later the long corridor was lighted up."

"By heavens," said T. B., admiringly, "they have even got an underground tramway; look here."

At this tiny terminus there were two branches of rails and a car was in waiting. A few minutes later T. B. Smith had reached the other end of the mine gallery and was seeking the second elevator.

"Here we are," he said—"everything run by electricity. I thought that power house of Farrington's had a pretty stiff job, and now I see how heavy is the load which it has to carry. It is very interesting. I have noted, and made a careful note of the way we are going. I think we must be about a hundred feet below the level of the earth; just gauge it roughly as we go up. Here we go!"

He pressed a button and up went the lift. They passed out of the little mine chamber, carefully preventing the swing door, and made their way along the corridor. "This looks like an apartment," said Ella.

If you want plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silky hair, do by all means use a little of dandruff. It will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't. It doesn't do much good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of liquid arvon, apply it all night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

T. B. as he stopped before a red-painted steel door. He found the door pressed gently, but it did not yield. He made a further examination, but there was no keyhole visible. "This is either worked by a hidden spring or it does not work at all," he said in a low voice.

"It is a spring," said Ella. "I will find it!" His sensitive hands went up and down the surface of the door and presently they stopped. "There is something which is little larger than a pin hole," he said. He took from his pocket a general utility key and slipped it into the steel needle. "Pipe cleaners may be very useful," he said, and pressed the long slender bodkin into the aperture. Instantly, and without sound, the door opened.

T. B. was the first to go in, revealing the interior. He found the room which, even if it were a prison, was a well-disguised prison. The walls were hung with costly tapestry, the carpet under foot was thick and velvety and the furniture which garnished the room was of a most costly and luxurious description.

"La Constance!" gasped T. B. in surprise. A woman who was sitting in a chair near the reading lamp rose quickly and turned her startled gaze to the detective.

"Mr. Smith," she said, and ran to the door. "Oh, thank God you have come!" She grasped him by his two arms; she was half hysterical in that moment of her release, and was babbling an incoherent string of words; a description of her capture and her escape, of her flight into an impenetrably confused rush of half completed phrases.

"Sit down, Lady Constance," said T. B. gently; "collect yourself and try to remember—have you seen Poltava?" "Poltava?" she said, startled into coherence. "No, is he here?" "He is somewhere here," said T. B. "I am seeking for him now. Will you stay here or will you come with us?" "I would rather come with you," she said with a shiver.

They passed through the door together. Do these doors open upon rooms similar to this?" asked T. B. "I believe there are a number of underground cells," she answered in a whisper, "but the principal one is that which is near."

She pointed to a red-painted door some twelve feet from the one from which they were emerging. There was another pause whilst Ella repeated his examination of the door.

Apparently they all worked on the pick system, a method which medieval conspirators favored, and which had been used by the French revolutionaries from the land of their birth; a land which has given the world the Borgias and the Medicis and the Visconti.

"Stay here," said T. B. in a low voice, and Lady Constance shrank to the wall. He stepped into the room, and the door opened slowly and T. B. stepped in.

He stood for a moment trying to understand all that the terrible scene signified. The limp body on the floor, the two remorseless men standing close by; Farrington with folded arms and his eye glowering down upon the dead man at his feet. Fall at the switchboard.

Then T. B.'s revolver rose swiftly, and he fired. The words were hardly out of his mouth when the room was plunged in darkness, his companion was flung violently backward as the electrical control came into operation and the door was slammed in Ella's face. He pressed it without avail. He brought to his hand the needle, but this time the lock would not move.

Ella's face went chalk white. "My God!" he gasped, "they've got T. B."

He stood for a moment in indecision. He had visualized the scene and knew what fate would befall his chief.

"Back to the gallery," he said harshly, and led the way, holding the woman's arm in support. He found his way without difficulty to the lift, sprang into it, after Lady Constance, and pressed the button. Now they were speeding along the sparking rails, now they were in the lift rising swiftly to the room in Moor Cottage, T. B.'s car was outside.

"You had better come with me," said Ella quickly. Lady Constance jumped into the car after him. "To the Secret House," said Ella to the chauffeur, and as the car drove forward he turned to the woman at his side.

"I will put you amongst your friends in a few moments," he said; "at present I dare not risk the loss of a second."

"But what will they do?" "I pretty well know what they will do," said Ella grimly, "Farrington is playing his last hand, and T. B. Smith is to be his last victim."

In the darkness of the underground chamber T. B. faced his enemies, striving to pierce the gloom, his finger in position upon the delicate trigger of his automatic pistol.

"Do not move," he said softly. "I will shoot without any hesitation. Where is the other man?" he asked quickly. "He is looking at Fall, and the doctor returned his gaze. "I forgot the other man," said Fall slowly; "in the corridor outside." He went to the invisible door and it opened at his touch. He was out of the room a few minutes, and returned looking lost and drawn.

"He has got away," he said; "the woman has gone too." Farrington nodded. "What does he matter?" he asked roughly; they know as much as they are likely to know. Put the control on the floor."

They turned over a switch and the other renewed his attention to T. B. "You know exactly how you are situated, Mr. Smith," said Farrington, "and now I am going to tell you exactly how you may escape from your position. You are interested to learn," said T. B. coolly, "but I warn you before you tell me that if my escape is contingent upon my own, then I am afraid I am doomed to dissolution."

Track and Field Stars to Compete

By Associated Press.

Chicago, June 25.—Track and field stars of the mid-west will match their skill on Stag Field at the University of Chicago tomorrow in the trials for the Olympic team that will carry the colors of America in international games at Antwerp, Belgium, next August.

With the pick of the mid-west's athletes entered in the nineteen events, some of the best competition seen in years is expected to develop. The meet has attracted 400 of the best performers in the Western Conference and Missoula Valley Conference in addition to stars from numerous athletic clubs and colleges.

Practically every entrant in the 100 yard dash has stepped the distance in 16 to 18 seconds. The list includes Howard Drew, joint holder of the world's record at 9 3/4; Jackson Scholz, the University of Missouri flier, who won the Western Conference 100 and 220 yard dashes; Joe Loomis of the Chicago Athletic Association, Haddock of Kansas, and twenty-one others.

Another batch of stars will clash in the quarter mile. Bob Emery, formerly of the University of Illinois, will run his first race under the colors of the Chicago A. A. Bretinal of Cornell College, Iowa, Butler of Michigan, Tom Campbell, Yale, Spink of C. A. A. and half a dozen others will go to the tape with him.

In the mile run, Jole Ruy, the Illinois Athletic club star, expects to find strong competition in Ray Watson, of the Kansas Argles, a winner in Missoula Valley conference distance events. C. C. Purman of Purdue, winner of the two mile event in 5,000 meter run.

A. A. Stagg, veteran coach at the University of Chicago, will referee the games. The entries follow: 100 yard dash—M. M. Cleworth, Yankton South Dakota; H. P. Drew, Drake University; B. K. Hart, University of Michigan; W. H. Simmonds, University of Michigan; B. J. Johnson, University of Minnesota; F. Kelley, University of Minnesota; J. H. Petchat, Kalamazoo College; C. PITCHER YANKS FOUGHT MONTHS TO GET IS ONE OF SEASON'S FIZZLES TO DATE

Two glimpses of Carl Mays.

The signing of Pitcher Carl Mays by the Yanks last season provoked one of the biggest baseball wars in history. The Yank went to the limit in hiring gal'tent to fight for Mays. He was figured on to help Babe Ruth and the other high-priced Yankees win a flag for New York. But he has failed to show his expected form this season. His failure to win regularly has been a blow to the Yanks.

Carpenier Will Not Return. It used to be the well known "Chinese puzzle" that was hard to solve. It used to be a hard task that was allotted to the equally well known "Philadelphia lawyer."

While the world's champion was awaiting trial the fans bore with Carpenier and considered his invasion of the studio, the stage and the circus ring as a legitimate field for recouping a lost fortune.

Then came the desire to see Carpenier show something for the money that sport loving Americans were pouring into his coffers. Even if it did smell of a mouse, the announcement of a fight with Levinsky gave the impression that Carpenier was at least sincere in his promises to fight.

But when the Frenchmen called off the fight and announced they were returning home in July the hands of fandom went up. Descamps said they would return in the fall to fight. But after so many conflicting stories, the fans are allowed to place any construction on that statement they desire. The impression right now in eastern circles is that Carpenier will never return if he gets away this time.
