

Are the Fly and Mosquito Dangerous?

The fly, with spongy feet, collects the invisible germs of diseases, spreads them over our food and poisons us with typhoid and cholera. The mosquito with its bite injects into our veins malaria and yellow fever. The bacteria of consumption, or grip, are everywhere present for us to breathe into our lungs. The blood which flows through our veins and arteries is our protection. It should contain healthy red and white blood corpuscles—capable of warding off these disease germs. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a blood medicine and alterative made entirely without alcohol, a pure glyceric extract of bloodroot, golden seal, Oregon grape root, queen's root, mandrake and stone root, which has enjoyed a good reputation for over forty years. The refreshing influence of this extract is like Nature's influence—the blood is bathed in the tonic which gives life to the blood—the vital fires of the body burn brighter and their increased activity consumes the tissue rubbish which has accumulated during the winter.

M. MAQUINE, ENG.

"About forty years ago while in Newark, New Jersey, I had chills and fever," writes Mr. MICHAEL MAQUINE of National Military Home, Kansas. "I went to Kansas City and in the spring of 1877 the chills and fever returned. Doctors and everything I tried failed to do me good. Finally I saw Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery advertised. I took one bottle of it and the chills vanished. In about a year afterward I felt them coming back so I got another bottle and have never had any symptoms of fever or ague since. That is all of twenty years ago, for I had the chills about twelve years before I started to take 'Golden Medical Discovery.'"

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are for Liver Ills.

A Severe Sickness Leaves The Kidneys Weak

After recovering from a severe spell of sickness some time ago, I was all run down and suffering from poor blood. I would have pains in my back and hips and my kidneys bothered me all the time I started taking Swamp-Root upon the recommendation of a friend and found it was just what I needed. My blood became all right and after taking a few bottles, I was surprised at the effect it had on my kidneys. They were entirely cured and I have much to be thankful for that your great remedy did for me.

Yours very truly
W. O. BLACKMON,

The Deadlock

"She seems so little to be sent to school," said Mrs. Richmond, looking yearningly at her diminutive daughter, who was seated in a corner of the living room, disciplining, with great earnestness and sternness, her large family of dolls.

"I wouldn't send her, then," said Richmond, easily. "What difference does it make whether she goes this year or not?"

"Well, I don't want her to be behind the children of her own age," said Mrs. Richmond, hesitatingly. "But she's such a tiny thing! I feel as if it would be deliberately giving my baby over to the hands of the destroyer."

"You might teach her at home," ventured Richmond.

His wife's face brightened. "So I might," she returned, "and I do believe I will." Then she looked dubious for a moment. "But I don't know what to teach her."

"Teach her her letters," said Richmond. "That was good enough for you and me, and I've heard lots of people complain that their children didn't know the alphabet."

"I believe I'll try," said Mrs. Richmond.

Accordingly the next morning she cornered her ewe lamb in the nursery.

"Now, Frances, darling," she said, with the carefully assumed veneer of buoyancy in which she had seen kindergartners and other guardians of the infant intelligence envelop themselves as with a garment, "you and I are going to have a dear little school right here in the nursery."

"I would rather," remarked the prospective pupil reflectively, "have a big apple and a piece of candy."

"Well, may be we'll have those, too," agreed the embryonic instructress, "but not until after we've had our lesson."

"What's a lesson?" inquired the pupil.

"It's—let's see. It's to teach you your letters, so you can read lovely stories out of books."

Frances pondered this for a moment. "But I'd rather have you read them to me," said said, after proper reflection.

"But you can't always have me to do that, dear," said Mrs. Richmond firmly. She drew Frances into her lap and opened the book with which she had decided to begin the fray. "All the little girls learn to read and mother would be terribly ashamed if her little girl didn't. Now, look at this funny letter with the two legs and the piece across the middle like a queer little ladder. What do you think that letter is?"

"I never saw it before," said Frances, "so I guess I don't care about its name."

"Well, that letter is named A," said Mrs. Richmond. "Now, here's one with two funny little fat balloons stuck on a stick. The name of that one is B."

"Is it?" Frances inquired with perfunctory politeness. "I guess I don't like to read very well," she explained courteously, as she made a tentative effort to get down from her mother's lap.

"But you'll have to learn, dearie," said Mrs. Richmond patiently. "Now, tell mother what this letter with the two legs is."

Frances put a fat forefinger on the letter.

"We'll call that B," she said sweetly. "Now, can I go, mummy?"

"No, lambkin," said her mother firmly. "That's A. See how funny it looks with the two alanting legs and the little piece between them. Now, what's its name?"

Frances heaved a deep sigh. "I guess we'll call it B," she said, with gentle firmness.

"But it's A, precious," insisted her mother.

"Is it?" inquired Frances. "I think I'll call it B."

"Now, Frances," said her mother sternly, "you know that letter is A, and you must say it."

There was no reply. Frances was observing a sparrow shaking itself on the window ledge.

"Frances," her mother said, "tell mother what that letter is."

"Oh, mother," Frances cried joyously, "did you see that sparrow picking his tooth with its feather?"

Mrs. Richmond set her small daughter down on the floor. "Now, Frances," she said, "tell me the name of that letter or I'll put you to bed."

Frances looked up at the ceiling and crossed her fat hands on her little stomach. "We'll call it B," she said finally.

Half an hour later Mrs. Richmond went into Frances' little room. A sweetly smiling face looked up at her from the bed.

"Baby," she pleaded, "please do as mother wants you to. Mother hates to punish her baby. Tell me the right name of this letter."

She drew out the book and laid her finger on the much discussed letter. There was a breathless pause.

"Well, mummy," said a bored voice deliberately, "may it be an A for you, but I guess I'll call it B."

"I think I'll have to send Frances to school after all," admitted Mrs. Richmond to Frances' father that evening after dinner. "I'm afraid my method of imparting instruction is not sufficiently modern."
