ROUND TRIP (Continued from Page One.) ticket I ever stamped," he remarked suspiciously as he gave the impression of indignity to their transportation an extra hard squeeze.

When the ridiculousness of the situation dawned upon them; but that was at home and they didn't mind it so much. They bought Pullman tickets, of course, and took their seats. When the conductor got around to them, the word "CHARITY" seemed to pop up and dance around on the slips of paper. They and the conductor observed it at the same time, and just as the conductor looked down to take an accurate inventory of their dress and physical condition, both Paducah gentlemen turned scarlet.

"You're the first people I ever saw riding in a Pullman car on charity tickets," the conductor remarked in a tone that indicated he attached no particular credit to the distinction he thus accorded them. When the crowd of legislators, lobbyists and representatives of other cities at Frankfurt got next, there was no end of gaying, and finally, one legislator from Lexington, said: "You're the first city officials I ever saw reduced to such straits and no friends of mine ever has to ride on a charity ticket. The next time you want to go anywhere, just write to me and I'll see that you get all the transportation you want."

They returned today satisfied that they were pioneers in this sort of municipal economy; but with little confidence in the precedent they established. "We were the first. Everybody told us so," dryly commented Alderman Lackey. "But, you know, the first shall be last; and I rather suspect we will be the last as well as the first to try it."
