THEY CARRY PISTOLS

Feminine Chicagoans Prepare for Hold-Up Men.

But the Absence of Pockets in Their Dresses Compels Them to Secret the Weapons in Their Petticoats.

Up-to-date Chicago women are carrying revolvers wherewith to do to death the audacious footpad who shall dare to attack them. Having no hip pocket—or any other kind of pocket, for that matter—in coat or gown in which to bestow the revolver or pistol, the Chicago woman is resorting to her petticoat—where she couldn't by any possibility get it in a hurry.

In defense of the seemingly questionable practice of carrying the pistol in a petticoat pocket the women who are indulging in this little diversion urge the fact that they have nowhere else to carry it. This is the manner in which a Chicago club woman who is credited with having drawn the thoughts of large numbers of her sisters from the woman suffrage and silk petticoat questions toward the pocket-pistol, crumpled up the habit of putting her own silk petticoat to such an unusual use. For several days she had been pursued by newspaper and social versions of the annual footpad case story. As the business which fate compels her to follow often takes and keeps her out late at night, while she is by nature a timid and shrieking mortal of femininity, she grew nervous. But no way out of the difficulty offered itself until a masculine friend suggested that she carry a revolver. Next day that wise woman went downtown and purchased a regular factory-made, steel-barreled, handled pistol. Then she took it out into the back yard and created a terrible sorrow for her next-door neighbor. In shooting at the shed, directly in front of her, she killed the $50 Angora pussy who was disporting herself in the yard to the left. A pair of pigeons in the yard to the right suffered extinction on her second and third efforts at hitting that lawn dove. Then the woman with the new pistol promptly slipped it into the long-john pocket of her best silk petticoat and decided that she really didn't know whether she could hit a barn door or not; she just knew she could kill a footpad if he attempted to interfere with her.

The very next night she was out late, and as she made her way under the elevated railroad she saw a man walking toward her, keeping carefully in the shadow of the trees. At that moment it was all she thought he was doing. Now she is willing to admit that possibly he was merely crossing the street like herself, or waiting for a train. Breathless and trembling she reached the end of the block, and the unexpected did not happen. She could discover the whereabouts of neither pistol nor the opening of her dress. By the time the opening had been located the man was nearly a block away. She herself was more than a block away in the other direction, and she decided for her pistol she had unconsciously taken to her heels. Had the man really attacked her she would have been caught in a terribly helpless position, for at the moment of their meeting both hands were so occupied in trying to get the opening of their dresses that they were practically tied.

Two of this woman's converts to the petticoat-pistol habit also had an amusing experience a night or two ago. The conversation at the dinner table had turned largely upon footpads and highway robbers, and the two girls, who were going out to spend the evening, grew extremely shivery. They started off, and just as they turned down the block in which the house to be visited stood they saw before them a man slowly "loitering" along behind them. They called to him to stop, and he stopped. Both girls "just knew" that the two villains were in league and would presently close in upon them and rob them of all their valuables, so they arranged a plan of action.

"If he stops or comes any nearer," they agreed, referring to the unexpected arrival of the man, "we'll shoot just as we see fit." The unfortunate man either got the sidewalk, fancying the girl out or in trouble, hurried into the hallway after them. The girls, scared almost to death, flew up the stairs just as the occupant of all the flats came tearing down the hallway, with the revolver tripped, fell, and—presto! a pistol shot sent all the spectators scattering. When the patrol wagon arrived and the girls were given a chance to explain themselves there was much laughter.

Still another ghastly story is going the rounds about a well-known club woman who quite forgot the pistol in her petticoat pocket when rudely attacked by a genuine robber, and afterward attempted to shoot her own husband when he came up with her a little later. And still another sad anecdote, quite authentic if current reports are to be believed, tells how a second and prominent club woman proudly related the story of the perfectly lovely pistol with which her husband had presented her to a group of feminine acquaintances, and posed the next 20 minutes by the clubroom clock, in training to extract from the depths of her petticoat pocket—Chicago Inter Ocean

UP THE ALPS BY RAIL.

Contemporary Civilization is Unmistakably Fulfilling Napoleon's Prophecy.

"There shall be no Alps," said Napoleon, and he dragged his army over them. Modern science has accomplished the same annihilation. The new electric railway up the side of Gornegrat, one of the highest peaks of the range, will be opened soon. So elated is the engineer with his success that he is already planning to build a road up the steep ascent of Mount Blanc, "the monarch of mountains." The road up Gornegrat is ten miles long and rises by a gradient of about one foot in five during most of its ascent, reaching its highest point at Rhyfallalp station. This is situated on the ridge and is over 10,000 feet above the level of the sea and lies between Findelen and Gornegrat.

From Gornegrat the traveler has a view unrivaled throughout the Alps. It has long been the favorite excursion of Swiss travelers, who ascended it to Zermatt by a mule path with comparative safety and comfort. Beyond a footpath ascends almost to the top, but its dangers and difficulties forbid its ascent to all but the most intrepid mountain climbers. The new road, however, brings it within the reach of all.

Rhyfallalp there overlooks the entire Findelen valley and the traveler might be well satisfied to return by the way he came. However, the engineer has been even more considerate. By reversing the direction of his train he carries you right down into and through the valley, bringing you back by a beautiful circuitous route to Zermatt.

The trains will be driven by electricity generated from the torrent that flows from the Findelen glacier, a huge pipe down the mountain side carries the water at a high pressure to the dynamo beneath the bridge. The dynamo are capable of developing 1,800 horse power, and the current will be conveyed by overhead wires to the motors attached to the carriages. The bridge across the Findelen is unique as it is 164 feet above the river, or 16 feet higher than the bridge at Fritznog, hitherto the highest railway bridge in Switzerland. The electrical motors will drive on a central cogged rail, between the two ordinary rails, as the gradient is much too steep for the train to be driven by simple adhesion.—Boston Journal.

Minnesota's Ancient Rocks.

Prof. Winchell, of Minneapolis, considers the greenstone of Minnesota the oldest known rock, and as representing the original crust of the earth. The lower series of it is purely igneous, the upper, or "elastic," series consists of greenstone, more siliceous rocks and conglomerates, more or less altered by the action of water. It is supposed that the Laurentian granite and igneous rocks of Canada were the oldest rocks. The silica and potash of the upper greenstones of Minnesota bespeak, he thinks, a primeval alkaline ocean with silica in solution. From this ocean comes the great stock of the world's silica in the Arkansas region.
