Alaskan babies are rubbed with oil, tightly rolled in a skin or blanket padded with grass and bound with deer skin thongs, which are undone but once a day, when the grass is freshened. If the baby cries he is held under water until he is still.

Whereas in 1837 the amount of tea consumed in England did not exceed 30,000,000 pounds, all of which came from China, the quantity now imported is upwards of 230,000,000 pounds, or more than 2 1/2 pounds a head of population.

THE VILLAGE OF LETREIS.

Quaint Little Settlement as Described by a Tourist.

Letrois is a village, or rather a fragment of one; the name somewhere, as is the custom in Finisterre. It is a little settlement of houses on a little spit of ground on a sharp bend in the river; some seven or eight houses in all, whitewashed and smiling, and wearing an indubitable air of strangeness, half southern, half maritime, in this dark green setting of heavy Breton hills. Fig trees luxuriate in the neglected back garden of the dependance, while lilacs twist and bend freely into shapes of delight among old cans and crocks and struggling gooseberry bushes. The branches of one fig tree, accessible from outside, are the storehouse for oars and spars, along up by odd ends of rope. From my seat in the garden I catch curious glimpses of masts and pennons, gliding silently by above the top of the old wall; between spreading fig leaves and tangles of ivy I hear the sayings and doings on the other side of the wall, the gossip of the donianer and his wife, the "inspector de poisson" haranguing his troublesome subjects, the fishermen, queer little human animals in ragged petticoats, playing with themselves like squirrels, while humming quaint refrains through their noses. From my window in the front room I command a view of the center of interest, the jetty at the ferry and the broad sweep of golden beach beyond, with the filmy screen of festooned nets to the right and the double rows of bending, pulling, swaying fishermen. The fishermen are not always there, of course, but very often, and one never tires of taking in the rugged expressions of their movements, and of watching the crescendo of their excitement, as the magic semicircle of the salmon seine shrinks and contracts until the splashing, leaping creatures of silver are landed, and after some trouble, counted on the shore.—Scribner's Magazine.

"La Creole" Will Restore those Gray Hairs of Yours

Written at Random.

Several gentlemen were on the market this morning, talking of war. Some of them had seen war, while others had not.

"I was a boy during the civil war," related Market Master Ingram, "and sold papers. I was arrested right in this market one day and carried over to the guard house, which stood directly across the street there, near the old St. Clair hall, and kept there for two days. May be I wasn't scared; it happened that I was going through the market selling papers, when I thoughtlessly shot a fire cracker. The soldiers promptly nabbed me, and the next two days I spent in the guard house. They had to pay me for my papers, though."

"Another time, up in Caldwell county, I was out in the field one day, when a squad of soldiers came along. I took to my heels, and they began shooting at me. I could hear the bullets flying all around me, and finally was relieved to reach the front gate. But here came a soldier after me, and I was soon overtaken. He arrested me, but just as he started away he fell dead. He had been shot from his horse by a sharp shooter who was in the copula of the court house, a considerable distance away."

HAMATIC OR OTHERWISE.

One Rev. G. C. Harskari, P.H.D., is attempting to untangle the Hamitic knot. In an article appearing in the Eastern Lutheran, published at Hartwick Seminary, Ostego county, N. Y., he says:

Gen. x: 25. "Again if no curses ever have changed a white man into a black man, whether pronounced by either God, or by patriarch or by prophets, or by apostles, that we naturally inquire to know, on what principle of interpretation of the scriptures and of history, the presence of the negro race is to be accounted for. That he was not one of Noah's family, and yet must have been in the ark, and have entered the same in some capacity or relation to the cattle or other beasts is evident. For, that he did not enter the ark when the whole globe was deluged and all of mankind excepting Noah and his family and the animals in the ark were destroyed is evident from the fact that he is now here, and yet not of the family or progeny of Ham. Again no one has ever suspected either Shem or Japheth of being the father of the negro; and, therefore, he must have come out of the ark; and he could not have come out unless he had previously entered it; and if he entered it, that he must have existed before the flood, and that, too, just such a negro as we have now, and consequently not as a descendant of Adam and Eve; and if not the progeny of Adam and Eve, that he is inevitably a beast, and as such, entered the ark, though having the form of a man, and man he is, being so named by Adam."

It is to be supposed that this very erudite philosopher and theologian assumes to set at rest the much mooted question as to the derivation, or the origination of the race. Perhaps the very able gentleman is not acquainted with the fact that some of the best thinkers of the negro race, and of other races, have wrestled the question threadbare. However, it is safe to say that none of his illustrious predecessors in this field have arrived at the same conclusion with him.

It is no wonder that the great Titan, Bishop Turner, makes such a savage defense of his race. Bishop Turner's God is black, and the world laughs, and yet why not black? Is it a matter of color preference? Who does the preferring? Are there not more blacks than whites? Yes, and outside of the lack of evidence to substantiate a preference to color argument, the greater number is to be served and these are black. The Freeman does hold with Turner that God is black, but it does hold that there is no more impropriety in his being black than any other color. Turner meant to make that point emphatic. And as to the Hamitic question again Dr. Harskari can find more pleasure and more profitable entertainment than relishing the old Hamitic story. We will do the world a vast amount of good if he can tell the negro whether he is drifting. If his origin is wrapped in mystery; clarifying the conditions has nothing in his favor.

The negro is here and of which all have abundant proof. The chances are that he is not concerned much as to his mode of getting here. The doctor's job on the part of the negroes will be a thankless task even should he locate his primeval habitat, or establish his lineage, if such discovery does not carry with it some beam for pangs and deprivation that has attended his way since his advent.—The Freeman.
