THE CONTINUITY OF LIFE.

How often in this earth-life of ours are we perplexed by seeing a strong, useful person cut off in his prime, leaving a work that is eminently fitted to him and for which he has long been training, before he sees its fruition. Then again, there is the apparent unevenness of life's adjustments confronting us: the round peg in the square hole, as it were. The man behind the counter who has the longing of an artist, or the soul of a poet, but whom stern poverty's forces to a task, where the heart is not; and he who loves the scholar's life and yet is doomed to manual labor, and leaves the world with his dearest wish ungratified. There would be a terrible dreariness in all this were it not for the hope of a life beyond where things can be re-adjusted and completed for us. It is a blessed thought to look upon this life as a school-room where our tasks are set, or our apprenticeship served, and when we leave it we pass on to unending life and unending powers and ambitions realized. The incompleteness of things here is a prophecy of a life to come, and not only that but more and more today is it believed that heaven is not to be the mere lounging-place that it was once regarded, where harps are played, and songs sung. What would be the use of toiling so hard to learn things for the brief while here, if we had to lay them aside forever when we stand in the Land beyond? No, Heaven is the place where we bring to perfection the lessons begun here, is the beautiful thought of cheer and comfort that is being grasped at today.

Are you pursuing a task that gives you pleasure and for which you feel especially fitted? It will not seem so hard then to lay it down at the Master's call, if it is but to journey a little, and take it up again in another life. Says Victor Hugo: "When I go down to the grave I can say, my day's work will begin again the next morning. The tomb is not a blind alley; it is a thoroughfare. It closes in the twilight to open with the dawn." And you take it up with every faculty at its highest, no weakening of your powers, no danger of collapse of health, strength, and brain. You can bring your work to the perfection you dream of here, yet are never able to attain.

Have you ever noticed how man in his chosen profession is gaining fullness of knowledge just when age is incapacitating him for active service? Now what would be the use of that knowledge if his life-work stopped there? It would mean a waste, and nothing is ever wasted in God's great plan. A physician who for years stood at the head of the medical profession in Paducah, and not long before his death that he was really more fitted to practice than when he was younger, his knowledge was so much greater. Don't you believe he is being allowed to use that knowledge in some way to splendid advantage in his new life? It is the only way one can reconcile the call to be idle here, in the last days of many who realize their ability to do much, if their strength were only equal to the demand.

Then those who go through life with some heart-longing ungratified! Think you they are never to be satisfied? Some one has said, "that God in heaven has reserved a niche for our idols." Then will not those unsatisfied here be satisfied hereafter?

Nothing more heart breaking has ever been given to the world than a little plaint found among Sidney Lanier's papers after his death. Lanier, ill, feeling that the time was short was compelled to labor at the ungenial task work of teaching to get bread for his family, when within him he felt thoughts burn, and he cried aloud in this for "time out of the struggle for bread to write my poems." Is not Lanier allowed to fulfill his desire in heaven? Yes, or else it would not be heaven to him. O! it is a thought that will glorify life and stay us over the ill-adjusted things here, this setting straight of earth's misfits in heaven. There will be symphonies composed and sung by souls debarred of utterance here; there will be wonderful books of prose and poetry written by those who felt the vision and has not the power here; pictures painted by the unknown artist; papers edited by the journalist who never had the opportunity. And those who were cut short in their progress here, they will run and not walk, leap and not plod over there.

It may be this is too materialistic a view of heaven for those who still cling to it as the traditional resting place of the saints. But this is a rest place of the highest kind, the true rest of being fitted to your sphere, no longer a weary, hopeless beating against the massive, unyielding walls of uncongenial surroundings. It is the rest of having no tired body, eyes, heart, or brain, the rest and the strength of perfection in every detail.

Kipling, the masterful worker and man who is never idle, has expressed his views on the future in a little poem that has the invigorating ring of all that he writes, and is good for quoting here as being applicable to the subject at hand:

When earth's last picture is painted and the tubes are twisted and dried,
"When the oldest colors have faded, and the youngest critic has died,
We shall rest, and, faith, we shall need it—lie down for an aeon or two.
Till the Master of all Good Workmen shall set us to work anew:
And those that were good shall be happy; they shall sit in a golden chair:
They shall splash at a ten-league canvas with brushes of comets' hair:
They shall find real saints to draw from—Magdalene, Peter and Paul:
They shall work for an age at a sitting and never be tired at all!
And only the Master shall praise us, and only the Master shall blame;
And no one shall work for money, and no one shall work for fame;
But each for the joy of the working, and each, in his separate star,
Shall draw the thing as he sees it for the God of Things as They Are!"

Know that strength is yours in proportion to your progress, enough for each day, be it mental, physical or spiritual. Realize that there is a reward for every labor, rest after every task, and rise for every faculty developed. Your reward may not be what you expect; probably it will be much better. The power which comes from trying is more than worth the effort.—Adelaide Keen, in the April Ladies' Home Journal.

The army canteen is causing no trouble since it was abolished than when it was in vogue. The obvious intention in doing away with it was to reduce intemperance among the soldiers, but it has evidently failed in its purpose. Lieut. Ross, recently in the Philippines, states that before the canteens were established there the soldiers drank vino, a deadly native decoction. After the inauguration of the canteens, drunkenness fell off 10 per cent. While this is used as an argument in favor of the canteen, it may be the exception instead of the rule. It is certain, however, that a strong effort will be made at the next session of congress to restore the canteen, and when confronted by the problem Congress should give the pros and cons a thorough sifting.

The school board has made no arrangements for carnival week. It is probable that if the schools are held full time, the attendance will be so small as to be detrimental to them. The board will act on the matter Tuesday evening, and it is hoped the members will take a sensible view of the situation, and not attempt to keep the pupils in school at a time when it will be almost impossible. It is suggested that a good plan would be to order one session during the week, with the exception of Thursday, the big day, when the flower parade will take place, and the children should be given a whole holiday.

Paducah is preparing for the biggest time in her history. It behooves everybody to show true Kentucky hospitality, for there will be thousands of visitors.

HOUR BY HOUR.

From "Make Thy Way Mine, and Other Poems," by George Klinge.

One single day
Is not so much to look upon. There is some way
Of passing hours of such a limit. We can face
A single day; but place
Too many days before sad eyes—
Too many days for smothered sighs—
And we lose heart
Just at the start.
Years really are not long, nor lives—
The longest which survives—
And yet to look across
A future we must tread bowed by a sense of loss,
Bearing some burden weighing down so low
That we can scarcely go
One step ahead, this is so hard,
So stern a view to face, unstarred,
Untouched by light, so masked with dread,
If we would take a step ahead.
Be brave, and keep
The feet quite steady; feel the breath of life sweep
Ever on our face again.
We must not look across—looking in vain—
But downward to the next close step.
And up. Eyes which have wept
Must look a little way, not far.
God broke our years to hours and days, that hour by hour
And day by day,
Just going on a little way,
We might be able, all along,
To keep quite strong.
Should all the weight of life
Be laid across our shoulders, and the future, rife
With woe and struggle, meet us face to face
At just one place,
We could not go;
Our feet would stop, and so
God lays a little on us every day.
And never, I believe, on all the way
Will burdens bear so deep.
Or pathways lie so steep,
But we can go, if, by God's power,
We only bear the burden of the hour.

Mayor Lang will deliver the welcome address upon the opening of the carnival. It will be brief, but to the point.
Our interests determine the level of our lives.
When little Billy, the pastor's son, saw the chickens that were suffering from the gapes, he ventured the opinion: "Praps, pa, they've been saying over some of your sermons out here in the yard."—Boston Transcript.
