PROHIBITION BEATEN.

The Battle of Atlanta, Georgia, Ends in a "Wet" Victory.

After the most heated contest on record in the State of Georgia, Atlanta on last Saturday voted against prohibition. The fight has been peculiarly bitter for over a month. Citizens have been engaged in the contest, meetings have been held almost every night and local speakers and foreign statesmen have stumped the country. Early in the campaign the Prohibitionists leased the largest warehouse in the city and fitted it with seating capacity for 8,000 people. Almost nightly that building has been filled amid such scenes of wild enthusiasm as are rarely witnessed. Almost every minister in the city preached prohibition from his pulpit. Both sides had full campaign funds and managed their respective causes for all they were worth. The negro vote was the bone of contention and the balance of power, each side making the most pronounced effort to get it. The negroes were considerably divided on the subject although the majority of them voted with the Anti-Prohibitionists. One feature of the contest was the active part taken by the women. The result of their work was shown that day by the appearance of many women at the polls with blue badges. They served hot coffee and sandwiches at every polling place and conducted prayer meetings and singing in crusades in the open air. Fulton County, in which Atlanta is located, voted two years ago on the same question and went for prohibition by a majority of 228. The registration this year exceeded that of last year by 2,000 votes. The principal fight made on prohibition during the campaign was that it did not suppress liquor selling and that intoxicating drinks could be openly purchased in a number of places throughout the city, which paid tax to the United States Government for the sale of whisky. Thousands of gallons have been sent in each month from cities around Atlanta. The Prohibitionists claimed that Atlanta has never had prohibition, but, while it was so voted years ago, licenses then existing did not expire until almost a year ago, and since that time the domestic wine clause in the local option bill allowed many places in the city by which the law could be evaded. This was, however, remedied by the last Legislature, which put a license of ten thousand dollars on all wine rooms on January 1. The city has "gone wet" by probably a thousand majority.

A CURIOUS BIRTH.

A Negro Baby Born in a Coffin in a Funeral Procession.

A Columbia, S. C., dispatch of last Tuesday says: Information was received here to day of the remarkable birth of a child in a coffin. The story comes from Clarendon county and is as follows: On Wednesday a young colored woman apparently died after a long illness. The body was properly prepared for burial and put into a coffin. All that night the colored people in the neighborhood held their usual wake over the corpse. Yesterday the funeral services were held in a church. The body was to be buried in a graveyard some miles distant. The procession had proceeded a mile and a half when the pallbearers were terrified by a crying which proceeded from the coffin.

The procession came to a halt, and after discussion the coffin was opened. To the consternation of the funeral party it was discovered that the woman was alive, but unconscious, and that a new-born babe shared the coffin with her. A number of the party fled from the scene, but others remained and administered to the wants of the woman and her infant. Both were taken to a neighboring house, and at last accounts the mother was doing well and her complete recovery is expected. The infant is in good health and thriving.

RAILROAD COLLISION.

A Freight Train Runs Into a Passenger Coach on the Montana Union.

On Tuesday a collision occurred on the Montana Union, a short distance from Rocker. The Butte dailies say that passenger train No. 1, which left Butte station at 7:20, was flagged and stopped a short distance from Rocker, by an ore train that was in trouble ahead. The Utah and Northern freight that left fifteen minutes later was properly flagged, but could not be stopped, and the engine crashed into the Anaconda coach in the rear of No. 1. There were two men in the rear coach, and in the other there were about two dozen passengers, including several ladies and children. Mr. George Haldron was sitting opposite a vacant seat, when Hon. Sam Word came along, and saluting Mr. Haldron with "How is the eminent barrister?" was seating himself opposite the latter, with his back to the engine, when the crash came. Mr. Word was thrown violently upon Mr. Haldron, striking his face on top of the latter's head, and damaging his plug hat. Mr. Word had one eye so badly bruised that it soon closed up completely, and a splinter from the seat, which was broken by the concussion, ran into his cheek, narrowly missing his eye. A young lady who was lying back a deep on one of the seats was thrown forward, striking her head against the back of the next seat, but sustained no injury further than a violent headache. Just before the collision Conductor West passed through from the front into the rear coach. He saw the engine of the freight coming and shouted to the two passengers in that car "run, boys, run!" They did run, and all three reached the rear platform of the second coach just in time. One of the men was thrown heels over head down the embankment, but the other two held their footing on the platform, and none were hurt. Conductor Mintie, of the freight, was not so fortunate. He was sitting in the cupola of the caboose and the shock shot him out through the window on the roof, breaking his nose. The brakemen had the skin peeled off his forehead, and Engineer Frost, who saved his life by jumping off the engine, injured his spine and sprained his ankle in doing so.

Thousands of drunkards have been made temperate men who have taken Golden Specific in their coffee without their knowledge, and to-day believe they quit drinking of their own free will.
