RICHES OF CAPE NOME

What a Montana Man Says of the New Gold Fields.

WILL YIELD $10,000,000

In Gold During the Next Year—Living and Wages Are High—The Beach Mines.

Wm. Henderson, formerly a well known resident of Madison county, where he was engaged in mining for many years returned to Butte yesterday from Cape Nome, where he has spent the summer. Mr. Henderson could not be induced to state the exact amount of wealth he brought back with him but expressed himself as being pleased with his trip. After attending to some mining matters near Norris, Mr. Henderson will return to the famous Alaska diggings.

"While there may be some exaggerated stories told of Cape Nome," said Mr. Henderson to-day, "the country is strictly speaking one of the richest gold bearing districts in the world. It is confidently expected that the output of gold from Cape Nome next year will exceed $10,000,000. Why we get nuggets up there that carry from $200 to $500 in gold and pans of dirt averaging $50 are not at all uncommon.

"The mines are situated about five miles from the town, in Anvil, Glacier, Snow, Buster and Dexter gulches. Snow gulch is only about a mile long and has but four locations each 1,320 feet long. Snow, Anvil and Dexter gulches yielded over a million dollars during the past summer and about the same amount was taken from the beach mines. About 700 or 800 men were employed in the gulches and over 2,000 men worked on the beach mines.
"Where did the gold come from?" Mr. Henderson was asked.
"That is a difficult question to answer. The gold is much coarser near the shore, which might lead one to believe that it came from the sea because the finest particles are found at the furthest point from the shore. There are two or three pay-streaks. The gold is found in a stratum of ruby sand. The bedrock consists of a stratum of clay.
"Living expenses are high. A square meal costs $3, a plain beefsteak $1.50. A small house rents for $150 per month. Beef is 75 cents a pound, flour $100 per hundred and wood $40 a cord. Wages are high, miner receiving $10 per day.
"The beach diggings have been staked out for miles, the pay streak extending over 45 miles along the beach. The farther out in the sea the miners go the richer the diggings. One dredging plant is in operation at the mouth of the creek and is turning out large quantities of gold. The sea is so rough that it is doubtful if dredging plants as presently constructed can be operated successfully.
"About a month ago there was another stampede from Nome to Cape York and Cape Prince of Wales, located about 100 miles north but I understand gold in paying quantities was not discovered there, except in a limited area."

THE COPPER MARKET.

The copper metal market is a distinct disappointment, but may soon improve or better yet, hold its own. It is figured that there is now an annual American production of 100,000,000 pounds of copper outside the Copper Producers association—mostly small mines of no great consequence individually, says the Boston News Bureau.
Aluminum has not yet become a competitor of consequence—its production is yet upon too small a scale. But the advance in copper to 18 1/2 cents reduced the use of copper in several lines of manufactures and this reduction was perceptibly felt by the producers. Business must now be recovered and each decline increases the consumption.
At what point production will again overtake consumption can not now be stated, but copper shareholders should clearly understand that copper shares really sold upon anything above a 15c copper market and that the average price of copper is under rather than over 12 cents. The people who have banked upon high prices and expected 20 and 22 cents for copper were not Boston copper shareholders, but Mr. Rogers and his Arcadian associates in the Standard Oil, who formed the Amalgamated company and are able to own it and pay the price for stepping outside their lines of business.
The New York advices state that copper is somewhat firmer, and the recession in prices appear to have received a check for the present. Lake is quoted firm at 17 cents. Exports recently include considerable Calumet & Hecla ingot to the continent, there is talk that the recent big sale by that company at 17 cents carries some arrangement protecting the buyers against a decline, although this is not confirmed.

THE COPPER STOCKS.

There was little change in the copper mining shares today. The quotations at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon were: Amalgamated, $87 bid, asked $88; Anaconda, $46; Boston & Montana, $320; Butte & Boston, $72 bid, $75 asked; Calumet & Hecla, $560 bid, $570 asked; Mohawk, $21; Osceola, $81; Parrot, $44 bid, $45 asked; Tamarack, $212 bid, $215 asked; Utah Con, $38.

HELENA-FRISCO STOCK.

Stock in the Helena-Frisco can be subscribed for at the office of the Thompson Investment company, No. 48 East Broadway, Butte, or at their New York office, Rooms 1214 and 1215, Commercial Cable building, 20 Broad street.

IDAHO HOLD UP THE RAILROADS

A. D. & M. Company Store Robbed. Burlington Visitors Royally Entertained.

IN BROAD DAYLIGHT BY THE TRAFFIC CLUB

Robbers Got Away With Some Cash and Gold Dust—Both Young Men.

News reached the city to-day by a roundabout route of the daylight robbery yesterday of the store of the American Development and Mining company at Gibbonsville, Idaho. The establishment was held up by two young men, Dan Harkins and Robert Dillman, neither of whom are more than 22 years of age.

Yesterday was pay day at the American Development and Mining company's mines. The company occasionally pays in cash. The robbers evidently expected to get away with considerable money. In this matter they were disappointed, as preparations had been made to pay the men in checks. However the robbers are supposed to have secured a handsome sum of money, and some gold dust.

The news was brought to the city this morning by a man from Dillon, which place has telephonic communication with Gibbonsville. This man reported the robbery to Chief of Police Lavell, together with a description of the robbers. Harkins is a short, dark man, about 22 years of age. Over his right eye is a scar. Dillman is tall, light complexioned and about the same age as Harkins.

SPORT IN HARD LUCK.

"This advertisement," remarked an old gambler, pointing to a notice published by a man who had lost a set of false teeth, "reminds me of the experience of a gambler in Denver some years ago who had to pawn his grinders for a stake. It was a cold winter night and I was bucking the games myself in a big Denver establishment, when I happened to notice this pawning event. A stranger from the east was playing faro, but lost so heavily that he changed to roulette. At this game the last of his bunch had disappeared before he knew it. He felt in his clothes, but found nothing, not even a watch. He had loaned his fine overcoat to a friend earlier in the night with the promise that it was to be returned by midnight, but the time had passed and the coat was not there. All at once the gambler threw his hands to his face. A thought struck him.
"Gents, he said, "is there a pawnshop for gamblers near here?"
"The faro dealer told him where to find one half way down the block, and the information was added that the owner had a soft spot in his heart for gamblers in hard luck.
"The eastern sport walked into the pawnshop a moment later and asked the owner how much he could advance on a fine set of teeth. The shopkeeper hesitated for a moment, but finally consented to loan $20 on them. The articles were carefully put away, and the gambler walked back with a $20 bill. He bought a stack of chips, and during the night played with remarkable luck. By 5 o'clock he was $300 ahead, after getting back the $1,600 lost before the deal with the pawnbroker. After he quit playing he had to sit about for three hours until the pawnshop opened.
"That same winter in Denver," continued the old man, "I saw other pawning experiences which taught me that the gambler's best friend was the man with the tree balls sign. It was in this same house that I saw a sport pawn a $100 overcoat ten times in as many hours. The sport was playing craps, and he seemed crazy about that kind of game. The first time he went broke he stepped out to the same pawnbroker and "hocked" the overcoat for $20. He came back, got a good streak, and sent the boy out with $22 and the ticket to redeem it. He played for a while and was broke again. A second trip was made to the shop, with the same result. And then a little later he was strapped. This juggling between the table and the pawnshop was continued for hours, though the sport finally quit when he had the coat and $450 in the pocket.

THE CZARINA'S LOVE STORY.

The czar always loved his orphan cousin, and as they met somewhat frequently he did not lack opportunity of discovering for himself that his love was reciprocated. But there were grave objections to the match, and the young lovers had many enemies. The czar's parents opposed the union with all the emphasis they could command. Princess Alix was a Lutheran and Nicholas belonged to the Greek Church. To Alexander III this was almost a fatal objection to their marriage, and everything was done that could be done to convince the young heir to all the Russias that he must accept another bride. Even Queen Victoria joined the little army arrayed against the lovers. Princess Alix was her favorite granddaughter and she did not wish her to change her religion or to face the perils of the Russian throne. There was another serious objection, too. Both the lovers were delicate, and Alexander III was naturally anxious that the throne of Russia should be occupied by his son. At last the obstinate czarowitch was sent on a voyage round the world, it being hoped that in the constant change of scene he would forget his love and come back prepared to do as he was bid. The love which had bound Nicholas to his orphan cousin was not, however, a thing that could be put off in a new country, an the heir apparent went back to Russia more determined than ever not to marry unless he loved. The voyage had greatly improved his health, so that part of the objection was removed.
But there still remained the religious objection, and Nicholas pressed his suit. He was fortunate in securing two powerful allies—the then Duchess of Edinburgh and the Grand Duchess Serge, sister of the Princess. Together these women were able to overcome the father's objections, but Queen Victoria had yet to be won over. It was no easy task to convert the queen, but it was done at length. The Duchess of Edinburgh persuaded the Prince of Wales, and the Princess Victoria prevailed upon her majesty. Then, as if to compensate the young people for their disappointments, the queen suggested that they should visit England. Prince Louis of Battenberg invited the Princess to Walton-on-Thames, and thither the young man who was to rule a hundred millions of human beings came to win the hand and heart of the woman he loved.

One would have thought that now the task was easy, but the princess was not easily won. If others had felt that she should not change her creed, she herself had felt so even more strongly. Years before, when the czarowitch first spoke of love to her, she had not listened, because of her horror of having to change her creed, in which she is said to have devoutly believed, and her strong religious nature had only rooted this objection deeper and deeper as the years went by. What happened at Walton, how passionately the devoted Nicholas pleaded, we do not know. But we know that a year afterward, at the wedding of her brother, the Grand Duke Ernest of Hesse, and Princess Victoria Melitia of Coburg, the betrothal was publicly announced. The czarowitch had turned up at Coburg at the last moment, not having been expected until shortly before he arrived. "I am determined at last to have an answer out of her own mouth," he said to his parents as he started. A day or two before the princess had talked of her lover with tears in her eyes. She gave vent to her religious scruples before her brother. "You do not love him, then?" said the Grand Duke Ernest, and the answer, "Oh, yes, I do, I do," showed how painful the struggle in her mind must have been.
The queen was the first to be informed of the news that the czarowitch had proposed and been accepted, and there was great joy among their friends that at last the long wooing was over. Then came the illness of Alexander III and the princess was summoned to Lividia to nurse the dying czar. When the monarch passed away, and her lover was Emperor of Russia, Princess Alix wore no signs of mourning. It was a happy thought of the widowed empress that no needless pain should mar the joy of the bride, who was soon to share her son's throne, and the house of mourning was brightened day by day by the beautiful, sad figure of the future empress dressed in purest white. It was thought best that there should be no delay for form's sake, and the funeral was quickly followed by a wedding. On November 26, 1894, at the age of 22, Princess Alix became Empress of Russia.—The Young Woman.

Departed For Anaconda This Afternoon—Mr. Eustis' Impression of Montana.

The Burlington railroad passenger agents took their departure from Butte at 12:10 o'clock today, going to Anaconda to look through the smelters, after which they will depart for the east. They saw the city last night under the glare of electricity. They were wined and dined and entertained sumptuously by the Butte Traffic club last evening, and this morning were escorted through the mines by Major Dawson of the Great Northern.
"We have been shown every attention," said Mr. Eustis, general passenger agent of the Burlington route, to an Inter Mountain reporter this morning. "We have been entertained royally and will not soon forget the hospitality of the Butte railroad men. They have taken us down into the bowels of the earth as well as shown us everything on the surface, and we are going back to our homes with a very good impression of the greatest mining camp on earth. If there is one thing that passenger men pride themselves on it is their ability to talk—that is the way they hold their jobs—any will repay the kindness and courtesy shown us by telling our patrons of the matchless resources of Butte and Montana."
The feature of last night's entertainment of the railroad men was the smoker at the McDermott hotel. It began about 10:30 and continued until 2 o'clock this morning. The eastern and western railroad men compared rates and methods of mutual benefit, and stories, sang songs and became acquainted with each other. It was a very jovial meeting.
