ARMLESS; MAKES BIG SUCCESS ON FARM.

Perry Dunmire Drives Auto and Does the Work on 160 Acres.

Bloomington, Ill., Jan. 8.—Although without arms Perry Dunmire, a farmer residing 20 miles north of this city, ranks with the most successful agriculturists of central Illinois.

he is as dexterous as most people with their hands.

Here are some of the things that Dunmire has learned to do successfully: Drive a five-horse team to a gang plow; plant corn as well as any one; drive a cultivator; drive an automobile; fire the furnace; open any door of the house; dress himself with the exception of at least his collar, write.

About the only things that he cannot do are harnessing the horses and milking the cows. He employs a hired man in driving his automobile to do such work.

He has learned to write with his feet, holding a pen between his toes. He has grown an expert that few will believe that his chirograph was not produced by a trained hand and fingers.

table garden and his fences are always in good condition. The house is a model of convenience, electricity being utilized in many ways to promote comfort and save labor.

The barn and other outer buildings are carefully designed and marked by modern ideas. All details were carefully planned by the owner and the results have been most successful.

Dunmire is married.

MOOSE RUNS WITH CATTLE.

"HULA HULA" IN CHURCH LYCEUM PEOPLE BLAMED

Sioux City, Iowa.—Men blushed, women walked out and young people giggled in Grace Methodist church when in the course of a concert number presented by Morningside college a Hawaiian girl, clad in picturesque costume, sidled out upon the "stage" and began to sing.

The concert committee explained later that it was all a mistake; that the Lyceum bureau had "slipped one over" on them by substituting a quartet of South Sea dancers for what was scheduled as an "intellectual interpretation of Hawaiian musical trends."
