NATIVES WANT TO SERVE.
Suva, Fiji Islands, April 4.—Native Fijians who have been disappointed because their offers to enlist in the British army for service in the war were declined by the British government have joyfully welcomed an opportunity offered to them to go to England and work as laborers on military transports. In response to a call for such laborers, issued by the secretary of state for the colonies, Henry Marks, a member of the governor's council of the Fiji Islands, has offered to equip and send wherever needed, at its own expense, a contingent of Fiji islanders for transport service. His offer has been accepted.
