BRITISH SHIPS RAIDED GERMANY'S "DOORSTEP"

Belated Account of the Recent Raid by Light Forces of the British Navy Against German Patrols in the Cattegat When Ten German Vessels Were Sent Down Shows the Entente Vessels Made Their Dash Right Under the Nose of the German Great Fleet, Which Remained Behind Fortifications.

Base of British Grand Fleet, Nov. 9.—(Correspondence of the associated press.)—The recent naval action in the Cattegat, where the British sank a German cruiser and ten armed patrol ships, is an example of the careful planning which lies behind every move on the naval chart.

Baron Munchausen. The Cattegat is a deep bay lying between Denmark and Sweden and leading out through the Skagerrak into the North sea near the scene of the famous Jutland battle. A fog lay over the entire Cattegat throughout the action, and the British destroyers picked up their victims one by one and sank them.

"Seized With Funk." Lauterbach's naval reputation probably will suffer somewhat from the Cattegat battle. His report that he fired his guns as long as possible in the Cattegat battle the first remark made by a German bluejacket rescued from the sea was a fervently expressed hope that the British had not made the mistake of rescuing his captain.

On Germany's Doorstep. The scene of the fight is 500 miles from the nearest British coast, but less than 200 from Kiel.

An interesting comparison might be made between this clear victory by the British destroyers and the tip-and-run raid by the German light cruisers on a British convoy on Oct. 17.

The Germans sent two of their fastest cruisers in the darkness, struck their blow in nervous haste in the early morning hours and even pausing to rescue a single life of hundreds of combatants and non-combatants, then ran away northward to spend the remaining hours of daylight in hiding and, when night fell, dashed down the Norwegian coast and returned home without being intercepted.

On the occasion of the British victory the light occurred not in the North sea, but on Germany's doorstep; not at night, but in daylight; not nervously, for 64 prisoners were taken, drowning men rescued from the water, thus providing a most vivid contrast between German and British methods of warfare. Moreover, no non-combatant lives were endangered in the British action, whereas the Germans ruthlessly and unnecessarily sacrificed scores of innocent neutrals.

"IMPREGNABLE LINE" CRUMBLES UNDER THE GREATEST ONSLAUGHT

The British drive covers a part of the field of last year's offensive on the Somme and that of Arras. The British front in this thrust is nearly opposite Cambrai, the important German base and railway center, from which the British line on the Bapaume-Cambrai road was about nine miles distant as it had stood for several months past.

What is known as the Hindenburg line was established by the German command last spring when the famous "strategic retreat" on the Somme front was carried out. It was supposedly an impregnable barrier.

Without Warning. The British movement in its early phases gives the appearance of being the most ambitious that has been undertaken by them on the western front since the creation of their new armies gave them the power to strike effective blows.

Even the rather extensive operations in this sector reported last night by the British war office, which the German staff announced it had taken measures to meet, gave hardly a hint that a push in any such force or over such a wide extent of front was in prospect.

How Things Stood. There has been little speculation over the possibility of a British attack in force on the western front this fall in any area other than that of Flanders, where the main British effort for several months has been expended. Even here the lateness of the season and the difficult nature of the ground at this time of year particularly seemed to give little basis for expectation of anything more than local strokes.

It has been apparent, however, that German attention was largely centered on the Italian front, where the military move in force intended to crush Italy is now in full swing.

Front Was Weakened. It is considered possible, however, that the British secret service had knowledge of a weakening of the German front in the west by the withdrawal of highly trained, experienced troops to give backbone to the push in northern Italy, an opportunity thus being afforded to catch the Germans unawares and hit them a crushing blow while their strategic reserve in the Franco-Italian war area was depleted.

The element of surprise, the report reveals, was a large factor in the initial British success, as, contrary to the almost invariable rule in this war, there was no advance preparation by the British artillery, the troops going "over the top" and falling upon the enemy apparently without any expectation that he was about to be attacked.

THE RIVAL OF HER HUSBAND IN BUILDING OF SHIPS

Seattle—Mrs. Nellie E. Morrow, the only woman proprietor of a shipyard on the Pacific coast, is a new wood shipping plant, was former owner of the yard his wife now controls here.

Mrs. Morrow ordered at once $20,000 in improvements in her new property, increasing dockage space and enlarging and improving the ways. She now has a plant that covers three acres and is capable of turning out $500,000 business yearly. It has enough work in sight to keep it running all winter.

Mrs. Morrow has made a special study of the technical side of ship building and repairing and as a result is thoroughly familiar with her work.
