Governor Stewart advises the appointees that, while the appointment is a great compliment and confers a high distinction upon them, it is in the nature of a draft upon their services and the duties contemplated are of a most important character. THE DIRECTOR OF EXPLOSIVES FOR NORTHERN MINNESOTA

Sybil Jensen

It is not the "service picture" either, Houser, though it does look as though the headline ought to say "Poses at Banquet for War Relief" doesn't it?"

However, when the bureau of mines at Washington, D. C., Mayor Charles Macey of Duluth to recommend a district director of explosives to control business for handling explosives, Macey dashed back the name of his 22-year-old secretary, Miss Sybil Jensen.

She was appointed. Miss Jensen has stepped being surprised when women may do in this war.

Miss Jensen's district includes the Mesaba range which has more iron mines than any other district in the world. Alloys are not permitted to handle explosives. Much of the labor there is alien. Handling must go on. It sounds like a "man's job."

FIRE SUFFERERS IN RELIEF CAMPS

Military Authorities and Red Cross Take Care of Many.

Selkirk, Dec. 1.—Staff correspondents of the Associated Press.—There are 7000 fire sufferers remaining out in tents in and around Selkirk, with the British and French military authorities and the American Red Cross taking care of them. A lot of these fire victims have an opportunity to see the American Red Cross, and what of these poor people and the efficient relief work being done, chiefly by the British, as they have the largest stock of available supplies, with the Americans and French also doing their share.

The Selkirk camp, where 2500 people are being cared for by the British and the American Red Cross, was the first one located. It is two miles back of the city, on a high hill, which the British thought to take when they made their first rush on the city.

On the way to the camp we passed the British supply base and had an opportunity to see the vast reserves of food and material in its ammunition boxes and various tin cans, which months ahead nothing could have shown more clearly that the British, like the French, are here to stay. In front of the base the stacks of shells extended for a mile along the road, and as far back as the eyes could see in the surrounding park, there were piles of wire, canvas, steel, trench coats and bundles of narrow gauge railway rails to put together a child's dream of a toy railway.

The stock of charcoal being laid in is prodigious, for there is little intention that the Tammes will again be cold while the war continues and during. Kitchens for the British army were drawn from the big reserve base. They were laid out in regular streets and cross streets. Everything was scrupulously neat with British soldiers on guard to see that order and proper sanitation were maintained.

"We have to do it all ourselves," said the commanding officer of the camp. "For singularly the refugees refuse to do a stroke of work for themselves. When their supply of fresh meat came we asked them to skin the flies off it, but they would not keep their own food clean unless paid for it."

The refugees are grouped in the tents by families, five to a tent, with army cooks. They are a very wretched lot, who lost everything in the big fire which destroyed Selkirk. There are many old women and children and over 200 nursing babies.

In the habit's nursery Red Cross nurses were looking the infants with boy scouts as helpers. Not a baby had died, and there is little sickness despite the unusual camp experience the infants are going through.

Food for dinner was being issued as the party passed. Each family had a card showing its number and needs, and only one member of the family is recognized in presenting these cards. Their holders were gathered in long lines, men, women and children. The British furnish a good part of their army rations and the American Red Cross adds rice and beans.

The Editor W. Ryker, head of the American Red Cross here, took the initiative in starting these camps, which now represent one of the largest

POLICE FORCE WILL ASK FOR INCREASE

City Council Will Meet This Evening—All Must Clean Sidewalks.

Anaconda, Dec. 1.—The local police force will make another appeal to the city council at the meeting this evening for an increase in wages. It is contended by the policemen that they are getting only $110 a month as compared with $120 for the policemen in Butte and they feel they should get an increase.

The city hall has been overhauled and the headquarters of the firemen have been condemned.

Chief of Police O'Brien has issued strict orders to all property owners to clean the sidewalks. During Saturday and Sunday there was from three to four inches of snow on the walks and many overlooked shovelling the snow away. Chief O'Brien is going to insist on recognition of the city ordinance which direct that the owners clean the walks at their properties.

HELD FOR PLACING BOMB IN THEATER

Reinhold A. Faust

Reinhold A. Faust, 16, has confessed, according to Chicago police, he placed a bomb in the Auditorium theater in Chicago several days ago. The bomb was found before it exploded.

At Faust's home police found stores of explosives and half-completed bombs.

Faust was born in Germany and came to Chicago when he was 16. For 10 years he was a retail clerk in Chicago. Then he was dismissed. That made him mad and he brooded over it until he reached the "I-hate-everybody" stage, police say he explained.

He denied any connection with the German government.

BUSIEST LITTLE LIAR AT WORK

Spreads Report About Intentions of Government in Respect to Food.

The Post's Washington Bureau.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 1.—The war situation has made him a highly specialized profession.

The general, all-around Ananias who created diversion and did no particular harm in times of peace has given way to the liar who specializes along particular lines of fabrication.

First there was the Red Cross liar, who flourished like a green bay tree a few weeks ago. His specialty was to throw a scare into well-intentioned people who were disposed to contribute to the Red Cross and his method was to disseminate the report that the Red Cross organization was made up of grafters and that articles of wearing apparel, such as sweaters, when contributed to the Red Cross, seldom found their way to the common soldier and sailor, but were grabbed off by officers and other higher-ups, who found them very warm and comfortable.

Then the bank deposit liar had his inning. His specialty was to inject a thriller into bank deposits by spreading the rumor that the government, in order to finance the war, was preparing to confiscate all bank deposits. Secretary of the Treasury, McAdoo, swatted the bank deposit liar in a statement in which he declared the government never had the remotest idea of doing any such thing and pointed out that under the law and the consultation the government could not confiscate bank deposits if it wanted to do so. This statement put the kibosh on the bank deposit liar.

Just now the food liar is getting in his work and he is perhaps the busiest little liar of them all. He operates in various ways. One of his favorite stories told to housewives is that the government is going to confiscate all canned goods above 100 cans in every household. Many a prudent wife, foreseeing a hard winter ahead, has stored up hundreds of cans of vegetables and fruits and the report that every household supply of canned goods over 100 cans would have to be surrendered to the government created a consternation in many a rural home and even had the city sewing circles going at a lively rate.

If the perpetrators of this yarn were called upon to explain what in the world the government would do with all this miscellaneous canned stuff they would be up a tree. The story is based, of course, on the theory that the canned food is needed to feed the soldiers and sailors, but, as a matter of fact, most of it would be utterly unfit for army rations. The government would not accept most canned goods as a previous gift, because of the impossibility of transporting them long distances and handling them without breakage.

Nevertheless, the food liar has made so much headway that in order to show him up in the proper light, National Food Administration Director Hoover has just given out the following statement:

"We have reports from various parts of the country of crooks, thieves and confidence operators who are gaining from house to house purporting to be authorized by the food administration and other departments of the government to collect or commandeer foodstuffs for the government or the army."

"I wish to say emphatically that no department of the government has or will ever make such demands on householders, and that all such people are petty frauds and should be held for the police. The government agencies are investigating various cases and information is sought of all such persons by this department."

Danger of poisoning from vegetables preserved by the cold pack method is a wartime nightmare which has no place outside of enemy propaganda, according to Charles Luthrop Pack, president of the national emergency food garden commission, who also takes a fling at the food liar.

Statements have been circulated that the danger of poisoning from the canned food which have been prepared by this method should be regarded with suspicion.

"We have made a careful research on this subject," continued Dr. Pack, "and have the support of Dr. C. H. Jensen and Dr. H. L. Lang of the department of agriculture in the statement that the danger of poisoning from vegetables prepared by the cold-pack method is less than the danger of lockjaw from pin scratches. As the cold-pack method involves sterilizing vegetables from one hour to four hours at a temperature of 212 degrees, it is obvious that no danger exists when directions have been carefully followed. The cold-pack method has been used for five years, and no death of serious illness has resulted from the consumption of food canned according to directions."
