STATELY MOUNT ATHOS.

The Sublime Idea With Which It Inspired a Greek Sculptor.

Three long promontories, projecting tridentwise from that southwestern corner of Thrace, known as the Chalcidice, prick the north edge of the Aegean like a little Greece. The westernmost reaches past Olympus and makes the lower part of the gulf of Saloniki. The easternmost, pointing toward Lemnos and the Dardanelles, is of great renown in the Greek world. Mount Athos is a steep wooded ridge five to ten miles wide, terminating some forty miles seaward in the peak that gives the peninsula its name.

This solitary marble cone, rearing abruptly from the sea to a height of 7,000 feet and capped three parts of the year with snow, has always impressed the imagination of its beholders. Pliny makes it throw its sunset shadow on Lemnos, a hundred miles away. Aeschylus names it as one of the heights from which the fall of Troy was signaled to Mycenae. Xerxes so rebuked its windy humors, having lost a fleet by them, as to cut a canal across the low neck uniting it to the mainland.

The sculptor Stasicrates proposed to Alexander the Great to carve the peak into a colossal statue of the conquering Macedonian, with a city in one hand, a river pouring from the other. And an early Christian legend hallowed it as the high mountain from which Christ was shown the kingdoms of the earth and the glory of them. Losing its ancient name of Acte, it thereupon became known as the Monte Santo of medieval travelers, in sanctity second only to Jerusalem, a refuge from the world as famous as the Thebaid.

Local tradition dates its status as a community set apart for men of God from the reign of Constantine the Great and connects several of the monasteries with the earlier emperors of Constantinople. The authentic history of Mount Athos, however, does not begin before the tenth century, when Nicephorus Phocas founded the monastery of the great Lavra. From that time it became the fashion among the princes of the east to patronize the monasteries of the holy mountain. Indeed, there still exist on the east side of the peninsula the ruins of an abbey built by Latin monks from Amalfi.—H. G. Dwight in Scribner's.

The First Piano.

The first real piano was made by Bartolomeo Cristofori, an Italian. He invented the little hammers by the aid of which the strings are struck, giving a clear tone instead of the scratching sound which all the previous instruments produced. It took 2,000 years to discover the value of the little hammers in making clearer notes. His first piano was made in 1709. The word by which we call the instrument, piano-forte, has, however, been traced back as far as 1598, when it is said to have been originated by an Italian named Paliarino. The first piano made in America was produced by John Behnd in Philadelphia in 1775.

Origin of Cotton Thread.

For almost a hundred years no one thought of making thread other than from linen and silk. Cotton was not so much as thought of. Then Napoleon, who had been devastating Europe, thought he would strike a blow at the silk industry of Hamburg, and so he caused the stocks of silk to be burned. The threadmakers of Paisley thus found their supplies of raw material cut off, and they had to look about to find a substitute. Cotton was tried and was found to answer the purpose so well that the basis of an entirely new industry was laid—the manufacture of cotton thread.

Monument as Winning Post.

There are monuments in all sorts of out of the way places, but one that is really unique is that erected in a river. It stands in the Parramatta river, New South Wales, a stream known the world over for the rowing events that have taken place upon it. This monument, which is in memory of the world famed rower Searle, is also unique from the fact that it has been used as the winning post for many of the races for the world's championship and is still used as such for local events.—London Strand.

Wheel Tires.

The greatest improvement in vehicle construction was when some bright blacksmith thought of heating the tires and shrinking them on the wheel. While many claim the honor, it is not known to whom it rightly belongs. Previous to this event tires were made in short sections and held on the felloes with nails. When starting on a long haul the driver always laid in a good supply of nails to use on the trip.

Of and Off.

The grammatical use of the English "of" and "off" proves to be a stumbling block to the average foreign element.

"Here's the paper you bought off me," is the usual expression of the newsboy, but it was a little startling for a woman of more than necessary embonpoint to be summoned to the back door to hear, "Here's the lard Mrs. Blank borrowed off of you."

More startling was the grieved servant's retort when the master, after vainly trying to dissect the steak, angrily demanded, "Where in blazes did you get this steak, anyway?"
"Why, I got it off of William!"—New York Tribune.

A Bismarck Story.

Lord Amphilh once found Bismarck reading Andersen's story on the "Ugly Duckling," which relates how a duck hatched a swan's egg and how the cygnet was jeered at by his putative brethren, the ducklings, until one day a troop of lordly swans floating down the river saluted him as one of their race. "Ah," observed Bismarck, "it was a long time before my poor mother could be persuaded that in hatching me she had not produced a goose."

Bread In Sweden.

In Sweden the bread of the people is for the most part hard, thin as a dinner plate and about the size of one. It is baked without yeast, and the water is practically all extracted in the process of baking; hence, relatively per pound of bread, its cost is much higher in the common forms of bread as we know them, containing one-half their weight in water that has cost nothing. Loaf bread and rolls in Sweden are a luxury.

Rivalling Boston.

A little Chicago girl was crying. "What's the matter, Noreen?" asked her father. "I fell and bumped my patella," she replied. Father was sympathetic. "Poor little girl," he said, and proceeded with the best intentions to examine her elbow. Noreen broke away. "Huh!" she sobbed. "I said my patella! That isn't my elbow. My elbow is my great sesamoid." Father went for a Latin dictionary.—Exchange.

No Quarantine Necessary.

"I am delighted to meet you," said the father of the college student, shaking hands warmly with the professor. "My son took algebra from you last year, you know."
"Pardon me," said the professor; "he was exposed to it, but he did not take it."
