Information For Fruit Growers.

BOZEMAN, Oct. 30.—Prof. R. W. Fisher, the experiment station horticulturist, has begun some investigations that are likely to prove very useful to the fruit raisers of the Bitter Root valley and eventually to other fruit raising sections of the state. He has gathered fairly complete figures from the Bitter Root, showing the total acreage in every orchard of consequence, together with the name of each variety grown, the method of cultivation used, and the yield per acre of each kind during the last four years and the current year. The results indicate that while a good many fruitgrowers are getting good money returns for their work, others are making little or nothing. A comparison of the figures show the reasons for this in the selection of varieties. Prof. Fisher will publish a bulletin on the subject during the winter, but meanwhile his studies make it clear that in the Bitter Root those varieties which are profitable are the McIntosh Red, the Alexander and the Wealthy; and that the best method of cultivation as shown by general experience is that known as clean cultivation, with a ploughing under the clover or alfalfa every few years.
