

Economic Marketing.

Poor Methods Partly Responsible for the Present High Cost of Living.

The economics of marketing is an important field for scientific study, fully as important to the producer as to the consumer.

EARLY VEGETABLES.

For the earliest use it is often advisable to start vegetables, such as cabbage, tomatoes, celery, etc., in the house or in hot beds, and transplant to boxes, pots or cold frames before it is warm enough to set in the open.

Sowing seed in a flat.

When it is time to remove the plants to the open field they should be "hardened off" by reducing the amount of water given them and exposing them freely to the air, to partially stop their growth.

FOR CORN AND POTATOES

Seed Bed Usually Better if Ground is Plowed in the Fall.

Plant corn or potatoes on land that has been in timothy and clover pasture or meadow for one or two years, if possible. Such soil should be in good mellow condition for these crops.

A well planned rotation, including grain, clover and cultivated crops, followed on any farm will give this foundation preparation of the seed bed for the cultivated crops each year without special planning every fall or spring.

Early spring disking allows the soil to warm up quickly, kills early weeds and the weed seed in the ground is given best conditions for germination and growth.

When a woman has crowded thirty-six hours of work into eighteen and still finds the mending undone, the windows unwashed, and the magazine uncut, it is time to devise methods for lightening the routine work.

Value of Barnyard Manure.

Manure from the barnyard adds humus to the soil; and humus acts like a sponge, retaining moisture in the soil, making it more capable of absorbing a heavy rainfall and of holding it there longer.

Points for Mothers

Let the Baby Learn to Walk Himself. Please don't do it! There is probably not one case in a hundred of distressingly bowlegs that cannot be laid to the fault of a proud mother or some eager relative who has not only allowed but encouraged the victim, when a baby, to walk too soon.

One can sympathize with very pardonable pride and eagerness with which young parents watch the first efforts toward walking on the part of the baby, but it is not easy to pardon the ignorance displayed in forcing the fat baby to stand and walk before the bones are strong enough to bear the weight of the heavy little body.

The baby allowed to learn to walk and to make his first experiments of his own accord without undue forcing or teaching will develop naturally, with small legs sufficiently strong to bear the weight of the sturdy body when walking time comes.

It must be remembered that it is not merely want of strength that prevents an infant from walking at first. The natural shape of the legs renders it impossible. The feet are turned in, so that the inner sides are upward. When placed upon its feet while the baby is very young the soles will not rest upon the ground.

Dr. Bull, the child specialist, said, "The best method of teaching a child to walk is to let it teach itself." This it will do readily enough. It will first learn to crawl—a procedure which exercises every muscle in the body and does not fatigue the child.

Then, having the power, it will naturally wish to do more. It will endeavor to lift itself upon its feet by aid of a chair, and, though it will fall again and again in its attempts, it will persevere until it accomplishes the feat.

Gardens for Little People.

Many mothers are now planning to have a little garden for John and Mary because this summer they will be big enough to profit by it, says Jessie Wright Whitcomb in the Mother's Magazine.

Many mothers are also ruefully remembering the crash of hopes last summer, so far as the children's gardening was concerned, and are wondering whether it will be worth while to try it again.

Or perhaps it may recall anxious little workers and sorry disappointment over poor, spindly, flowerless plants. We have had all sorts of experiences in our family, and I feel as though a succession of summers had drilled into me exactly what is what for a small child's garden.

The main thing is to have a very limited variety of seeds and those of a strong, hardy, free blooming sort. A child of three, four or five years can have a satisfactory garden of three sorts of seeds, so that he can learn the leaves of three plants and then weed out everything else.

Children love flowers, but they do not love disappointment, and the way to make contented little gardeners, even of children who perhaps have but little affinity with the soil, is to limit the varieties of seeds you give them and to have those varieties all bright, free bloomers.

Baby an Important Patron.

Everywhere baby is receiving proofs that he is the most important person in the community. Moreover, it is being taken into account that baby does not stay at home, as he used to, except for occasional and brief airings.

Even the hotels, which are generally thought of as soulless and indifferent and which formerly thought they were making ample provision for the infrequent and undesired baby visitor if they provided a high chair or two, have awakened to the fact that the baby of the twentieth century is a person to be reckoned with and to be catered to.

"A cot" was the reply to a request of this kind recently at one of the large hotels. "Yes, we can put a cot in your room if you desire. But would not your child be more comfortable in a crib?"

The mother, who had been worried lest her baby should not sleep well on an improvised bed in a strange place, almost fell on the hotel man's neck as she expressed her gratitude for his suggestion. Soon the porter brought in a little white cradle, with comfortable mattress and pillows, just like the one at home, and the parents were won as permanent patrons of that hotel.

In the splendid new railway stations that have been built recently, too, the fact that baby travels has been remembered, and in the well equipped and supervised rest room there are dainty cribs for the baby that has been fretted and worried by his unaccustomed railway journey.
