DEPTH OF OUR LAKES

INFORMATION ABOUT LARGER BODIES OF WATER IN IDAHO AND WASHINGTON.

Chelan Is Deepest, 1508 Feet—Coeur d'Alene is 200 Feet Deep—Examinations Made by Profs. Kemmerer and Bovard—Interesting Data Given About Water, Fish and Plant Life.

Dr. George Kemmerer, professor in chemistry at the mining department of the University of New Mexico, and John Freeman Bovard, professor in zoology at the University of Oregon, who recently completed a series of investigations on lakes in eastern Washington and northern Idaho for the United States bureau of fisheries, were entertained at a luncheon by the Spokane Chamber of Commerce recently, when they gave condensed reports of their work.

Dr. Kemmerer said, in part: "The depth of the lakes is one of the first things we have to determine. Although one of the simplest tests, it often proves highly interesting. The people living around a lake usually have a vague idea of its depth. In many cases they are reported 1000 or more feet in depth and even bottomless. Coeur d'Alene was reported to be 1400 feet. Hayden lake was thought to be more than 1000 feet. Even the national forestry men at Priest lake expected to find 1500 feet of water where they were laying a telephone cable in one of the narrowest parts of the lake. Pend Oreille and Chelan lakes were reported as bottomless. On the former the Northern Pacific railroad company's men were reported to have failed to find bottom off Granite point with 2800 feet of wire. The deepest water we have found in the lakes of the district is about as follows:

Depths of Different Lakes.
"Chelan, 1508; Pend Oreille, 1230; Priest, 350; Sullivan, 315; Coeur d'Alene, 200; Hayden, 195; Clear, 110; Loon, 105; Deer, 82; Spirit, 80; Silver, 66; Twin, 66; Williams, 50; Newman, 33; Calvert, 32, and Liberty, 26."
"The bottom of most lakes, contrary to the general opinion, is flat. Small deep holes are seldom present. In Hayden lake there is a square mile which does not vary a foot in depth."

Seasonal Changes Interesting.
"The seasonal changes in a lake are interesting. When a lake is frozen over the water is quite constant from top to bottom, both as to temperature, oxygen and carbon dioxide contents. When the ice goes out in the spring a change starts. The water at the surface warms up from 32 degrees Fahrenheit to 39.2 degrees, where it reaches its greatest density, when it settles to the bottom, and the lake is said to turn over. As the season proceeds the surface is stirred by the waves and warms up for a depth of from 25 to 40 feet. Below this the water usually stays quite cold. The line between this warm and cold water is called the thermocline. This continues as the season advances until the surface has a temperature of from 60 to 70 degrees, while the bottom stays near 39.2 degrees."
"Hayden lake, on August 28, was found to have a surface temperature of 67.9 degrees, the temperature at 37 feet was 55.4 degrees, at 50 feet, 57.5 degrees, at the bottom 40.3 degrees. Before the lake freezes it turns over again, the surface, cooling, reaches a temperature of 39.2 degrees, when it settles to the bottom, while the warmer water rises until the entire body turns over and the water becomes constant from top to bottom."

Plankton of the Lakes.
Discussing the biological investigations, Prof. Bovard said that the chief study is the Plankton of the lakes, adding that for his work the microscopic animals and plants alone are needed, adding:
"The purpose of this study is twofold. First, it indicates the amount of oxygen and carbon dioxide in the water, and thus is a check on the chemical analysis. The small animals demand oxygen to breathe the same as higher animals, so where there is no oxygen in the water we find the Plankton very scarce, and again where there is abundance of oxygen we expect to find abundance of Plankton."

Plant Life.
"The study of the plant life in a lake explains the absence and presence of oxygen. During the summer, when the plant life is growing rapidly in the lake water we find a small amount of carbon dioxide and much oxygen. Sometimes the water is supersaturated with oxygen. Then, toward the close of the summer, this abundance of plant life dies and falls to the bottom of the lake, where it decays and forms carbon dioxide. Thus, late in the season, we find the water at the bottom of a lake may have but a small fraction of a percent of oxygen, where early in the season it contained a high percentage. This, of course, affects the habits of a fish, as a fish cannot live where there is a scarcity of oxygen. This is especially so of the trout. Shallow lakes are usually warm, and therefore contain much plant life, and so undergo very marked changes with respect to the oxygen content. A shallow lake is a poor trout lake. Bass are not affected by the change of oxygen, hence a lake may be poor for trout but good for bass."

"A study of the Plankton will indicate the quantity of fish food. The relationship between a trout and the microscopic animals in the lake is closer than many think. The larger fish lives on the smaller fish. These, in turn, thrive on crayfish, bugs and minnows, and these on the small minute animals, such as we catch in our Plankton net. Abundance of Plankton usually indicate abundance of food for the larger fish."

"There exists an interdependence between the animals living in a given lake, a condition which is seldom given its proper importance. It is a condition of balance between food supply and fish, between one fish and another, between the animal and its environment. If one condition of the animal's environment is changed or a new condition is added, the balance is temporarily destroyed. This may mean that a species of fish might be exterminated before the balance is restored. For instance, Twin lake used to be a trout lake, and now the trout are replaced by perch. It never will be a trout lake again, for when once the animal loses its grip on certain conditions, nature never restores that same species to its original position."

"Investigations alone will tell what the actual conditions are. When we try to improve the conditions we sometimes spoil the whole thing. Grave mistakes can be made when we stock certain waters with fish without knowing all the conditions. The German carp, with no natural enemies, portends to destroy much good fishing. The carp was the factor that destroyed the balance for the trout. The trout could not produce spawn enough to feed the carp and still maintain itself. So, if the investigations show water good for trout, keep it a trout lake, or for bass, keep it a bass lake. There are all kinds of conditions in the Inland Empire, and there is little use in trying to have all kinds of fishing in the same lake."

BIG SMELTER BURNS

NELSON, B. C., PLANT SUFFERS $250,000 LOSS EARLY SUNDAY MORNING.

None of Property Covering 13 Acres Was Saved—Pare Case of Incendiarism—Had Not Been in Operation for Five Years, but Had Changed Ownership Last Week.

Nelson, B. C.—Early Sunday morning the huge plant of the Hall Mines and one of the largest plants of its kind in Canada, burned to the ground, smelter, covering 13 acres of ground. The loss is $750,000. Nothing was saved except the seven miles of cable running from the smelter to the Silver King mine on Lode mountain, the tall blackened chimneys, one of which is 200 feet high, and the one-story building used as an office. Everything else, the huge smelters, the tramway terminal and dump, the assay office, the boarding house and numerous smaller buildings, are tangles of burned timber and twisted iron.

The Hall Mines smelter was formerly used to treat ores of the Silver King mine and other famous properties on Lode mountain. Morning mountain and the adjacent territory, and employed hundreds of men. It has not been operated for five years, but a Vancouver syndicate promoted by R. S. Lennie of Vancouver lately effected a consolidation of the Lode mountain properties, acquiring the mines and smelter. The last payment on the properties was made only last week, and E. Nelson Sell of Vancouver had just completed a survey of the plant and mines with a view to recommending the best plan of operation.

The incendiary has shown utmost persistence. At noon Saturday a watchman discovered a fire in the smelter which he thoroughly quenched and arranged for extra guards. At 9 o'clock p. m., just after he had made a round of the buildings, fire broke out and within a few minutes the plant was a blazing furnace.

There is no clue to the incendiary. Previous to the fire the city posted placards offering $500 reward for information leading to apprehension of the culprit. In spite of extra constables and utmost vigilance on the part of citizens the police are completely baffled.

The Nelson brewery was burned Friday; loss, $50,000. It was set afire.

LEPER SUSPECT NEARABOUTS.

John E. Early Is Believed to Be Hiding in Some Inland Empire Town.

Washington.—Somewhere in eastern Washington, in one of the small towns near Spokane, John E. Early, the suspected leper, whose case has attracted world-wide attention, is believed to be in hiding. The exact whereabouts of the man has been kept a secret until he can be examined by several physicians who do not know anything of his case and the truth of the report that he has leprosy is established.

His whereabouts has become known through application to the commissioner of pensions for restoration to the pension rolls, thus reviving one of the most interesting cases with which the government has ever had to deal.

Early was placed under arrest here in Washington two years ago and declared to be suffering from leprosy. He was isolated for many months from the world and his family, but, being a veteran of the Spanish-American war, he was granted a pension of $72 a month for total disability.

In his application for reinstatement Early does not contend that he has leprosy, but says that his health is generally bad. In order finally to determine the case Commissioner Davenport has decided to have him examined out in Washington state by physicians who know nothing of the Early case and are ignorant of the identity of the person whom they are examining. If they say he has leprosy the man will again be separated from the world and restored to the pension rolls.
